

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

HBC THATCHER,

INDIAN BIOGRAPHY:

OR,

AN HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

OF THOSE

INDIVIDUALS WHO HAFE BEEN DISTINGUISHED AMONG

WHEN AMERICAN NATIVES

AS.

ORATORS, WARRIORS, STATESMEN,

AND

OTHER REMARKABLE CHARACTERS.

BY

B. B. AHATCHER, ESQ.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

W-YORK:

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS

No. 82 CLIFF-STREET.

1837.

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1833, h J. & J. HARPER, in the Clerk's Office of the Southern District of New-York

CONTENTS.

.

- CHAP. I.—Notices of Indians who submitted to Massachusetts, continued—The Squaw-Bachen of Medford—Her history, family, &c.—Sagamore James—Their intercourse with the English—Anecdotes of them—Complaints, services, death and character—Chickatabot, Sachem of Neponset—His war with the Squaw-Sachem—Visits Poston several times—Appears in court against Plastowe—Anecdotes of his Government—Indian policy of Massachusetts compared with that of Plymouth—Anecdotes of Chickatabot—His death. page 9
- CHAP. II.—Farther account of Master Weston's settlement, and the movements of the Indians against him—Aspinkt, the Nauset, supposed to be engaged in that affair—His tribe and power—Provocations from the English—Magnanimous revenge of the Sachem—His hospitality and kindness—Friendly intercourse with Plymouth—Is visited by Governor Bradford—By Captain Standish—Is suspected of hostility by Plymouth, and pursued by Standish—His death—Career and character of Ivanouca, the 'Courteous Sachem of Cummaquid'—Is suspected and pursued—His death.
- CHAP. III.—Summary account of the Five Nations—Their early history—Government—Conquests—Population—Territory—Intercourse with the European Colonies—Their war with the Adirondacks—Adventures of Piskary—Their negotiations with the French, in 1684—Ancedotes of the Onondaga Chief, Garroulla—His speech at the Council, and effects of it—Remarks on his character—History of the Five Nations continued to the time of Adrano—His exploits—Their object and results—War between the Confederates and the French—Adventures of Brack-Kentus.
- CHAP. IV.—Five Nations continued—Remarks on their oratory—Circumstances favorable to it—Account of a council of the Confederates at Onondaga, in 1690—Anecdotes of various persons who attended it—Speeches of Sadekaratte and other orators—Adaeatta—The history and character of Decamesona—His speeches at the Albany council of 1694—Style of his eloquence—His personal and political character—Other speeches and negotiations—Anecdotes of Sadekaratte.—49

- CHAP. V.—Account of the Ottawas—Their first Chief-Sachem known to the English, PONTIAC—His interview with Major Rogers—Protects that officer and his troops—Saves Detroit from an army of Indians—Hostility of the northern tribes to the English, after the conquest of Canada—Adventures of Henry—Anecdotes of Minavayana—Supposed feelings of Pontiac towards the English—His great project of combination.
- CHAP. VI.—Pontiac's plan of campaign—He commences active preparations—Council of the Ottawas—Grand Council of the Northern tribes—Dream of the Delaware—Maxims promulgated by Pontiac—Estimate of the number and force of his allies—Commencement of the war—Surprisal of nine English posts—mode of surprisal—Artifice adopted at Michilimackinac, and result—Reduction of Detroit undertaken by Pontiac in person—His interview with the Commandant—His plan discovered, and the surprise prevented—Letter from Detroit. 83
- CHAP. VII.—Siege of Detroit maintained by Pontiae—The Commandant meditates a retreat—The French propose a conference with Pontiac, which takes place—The latter demands the surrender of the fort, which the Commandant refuses—Vigorous renewal of hostilities—Advantages gained by the Indian army—arrival of succor to the English—Battle of Bloody Bridge—Pontiac at length raises the slege—Causes of it—The Indians make peace—His subsequent career until his death—Anecdotes illustrating his influence, energy, magnanimity, integrity and genius—His authority as chieftain—His talents as an orator—His traditionary fame.
- CHAP. VIII.—Account of the Delawares—Their ancient great men, including TAMENEND—History during the Revolutionary War—Two Parties among them—White-Eves, leader of one, and Captain Pire, of the other—Manœuvres, speeches, plots and counter-plots of these men, their parties, and foreigners connected with both—Anecdotes—Death of 1780—Tribute of respect paid to his memory.
- CHAP. IX.—Observations on the character of White-Eyes—Pipe's comment on his death—The latter gains and sustains an ascendancy in the Delaware nation—Glickhican, Netawar-wers and Wingerund—Subsequent career of Pipe—Joins the British and fights against the Americans—Grand Indian council at Detroit—Pipe's spirited speech on that occasion—Makes charges against the Missionaries, but fails to prove them—Remarks on his habits, principles and talents.
- CHAP. X.—State of several Southern tribes during the last century—The English send deputies to the Cherokers, in 1756—Their lives threatened, and saved by ATARKLLARULLA—Account of that Chieftain and his principles—The party opposed to him headed by Occonsorot—War with the Colonies in 1759 and two years following—Anecdotes of both these Chiefs

- -Salourn, Firror, and others-Several battles-Peace concluded-Attakullakulla wisits Charleston-His subsequent career, and that of Occonoston-Remarks on their character. 150
- CHAP. XI.—The Cayuga Chief, Logaw—Some account of his father, Shierlings—Residence of Logan—His friendship for the whites interrupted by their provocations—His family misfortance—The Shawance Silver—Herls—Logan joins in a war of revenge against the 'Long-Knives'—Battle of the Kenhawa—Treaty of Peace with Governor Dunmore—Logan's celebrated Speech—His history completed—Bucanvalanlan, the Delaware head War-Chief—His intercourse with the Christian Indians—Part which he takes in the Revolution—Defeated by Wayne, in 1794—Anecdotes of him—Death and character. 166
- CHAP. XIII.—History of Tecumseh and the Prophet continued
  —The latter encamps at Tippecanoe—Sends a message to Governor Harrison—Visits him at Vincennes—Increase of his forces—Attention of the General Government aroused—Tecumseh visits the Governor—His speech, and journey southward—Battle of Tippecanoe, November, 1811—Consequences of it—Indian Council at Mississiniway—Council at Malden—Speeches and Ansedotes of the Canra, WALT-IR-THE-WATER, ROWN-HEAD, and other Chiefs—Sequel of the history of the two brothers—Final exertions of Tecumseh—His death—Death of the Prophet. 2020
- CHAP. XIV.—Remarks on the character of Tecumseh and the Prophet—Their facilities for co-operation—Difficulties the latter had to overcome—His persevenance and ingenuity—Means by which he protected his person—Ancedotes of the Battle of Tippecance—Frankness of Tecumseh in disclosing his schemes—Caneso of his hostility to the Americans—Trespasses of the whites, and other abuses—Object of the belligerent combination—Ancedotes of Tecumseh's first visit to Vincennes, in 1810—His dignity, independence and courage—His ideas of the British policy—His speech to General Proctor, and remarks on his oratory—His humanity—His genius.

  2266
- CHAP. XV.—MICHIKINAQWA, or the LITTLE-TURTLE—Early history—Engages in a combination of the Indians against the United States—Blue-Jacket—The Turtle defeats two detachments of American troops—Some account of the North-Western from 1791 to 1795—The Turtle defeated by General Wayne-becomes unpopular after the peace—Some of the charges aga him examined—Anecdotes of his intercourse with distinguis Americans—His letter to General Harrison—His death in 18. His character.

CHAP. XVI.—The Seneca Chief, Rrn-Jacket—Circumstau under which he succeeded Corn-Planter in his influence—ecdotes of the latter—Red-Jacket's earliest oratorical trium; His speech at the Treaty of Canandaigus—Account of Farme Brothers, and Branter—Bolacket's political and relig principles—Speech to Mr. Alexander, in 1811—Speech to Richardson—Remarks on the causes of his heathenism in conduct of the whites—His military career—Speech in favo declaring war against the British, in 1812—Seneca Manifes Red-Jacket's interview with Washington—His interview v Lafayette—His Memorial to the New-York Legislature—Spe to a Missionary in 1825—His deposition and restoration in —Visits to the At'antic cities—Death and funeral obsequit Ancedotes.

APPENDIX.

No. I.	Genealog	y of UNCA	9.	-	-	-	-
	General	Wayne's	Corre	spond	ence	with	Majo
	CORN-P	LANTER'S 1	etter t	o the	Gover	nor of	Penn of the sam	e at V	Varrer	Cou	rt-Hot	ise.
No. V.	LITTLE 1	FARMER'S	letter	to the	Hon.	W.E	ustis.
No VI.	Obituar	y Notice o	f BRA	NDT.	-	-
No. VII	Crawfe	ord's letter	to the	e Gove	TOTTE	of Ca	ahen

INDIAN BIOGRAPHY.

CHAPTER I.

Notices of Indians who submitted to Massachusetts, continued—The Squaw-Sachem of Medford—Her history, family, &c.—Her sons, Sagamore John and Sagamore Jahrs—Their intercourse with the English—Anecdotes of them—Complaints, services, death and character—Chickatabor, Sachem—Visits Boston serveral times—Appears in court against Plastowe—Anecdotes of his Government—Indian policy of Massachusetts compared with that of Plymouth—Anecdotes of Chickatabot—His death.

Having heretofore had occasion frequently to introduce the names of Indians who subjected themselves, more or less, to the Government of Massachusetts, we propose in this chapter to notice a few of the most prominent of that class, who have not yet been mentioned.*

Some years previous to the arrival of the English, the various Massachusetts tribes, properly so called, are believed to have been confederated, like the Pokanokets and others, under the government of one great Sachem, whose name was Nanepashemer or the New-Moon. His usual residence was in Medford, near Mystic Pond. He was killed in 1619,—by what enemy is unknown. Two years afterwards, a

* See a sketch of Cutchamequin, of Braintee, in Chapter XI, Vol. I.

Plymouth party visited this section; and they then discovered the remains of one of Nanepashemet's forts. It was built in a valley. There was a trench about it, breast-high, with a periphery of palisades reaching up more than thirty feet. It was accessible only in one direction, by a narrow bridge. The Sachem's grave had been made under the frame of a house within the enclosure, which was still standing; and another, upon a neighboring hill, marked the spot where he fell in battle. His dwelling-house had been built on a large scaffold, six feet high, also near the summit of a hill.* It is evident that Nanepashemet was a chieftain of very considerable state and power.

His successor, to a certain extent, was his widow, well known in history as the SQUAW-SACHEM, and otherwise called the Massachusetts Queen. It is probably from the latter circumstance, in part, that some modern historians have described her as inheriting the power of her husband; but this is believed to be incorrect. We find no evidence of it among the old writers; though it appears, on the other hand, that some of the other Massachusetts tribes were at war with her's, when the English first made her acquaintance. It seems highly probable, that these were the enemy-rebels, we should perhaps say-whom Nanepashemet fell in attempting to subdue. His failure and death were sufficient, without the aid of that terrible pestilence which reduced the number of the Massachusetts warriors from three thousand to three hundred, to prevent any attempts on the part of his widow, for recovering or continuing his own ancient dominion.

Still, the Squaw-Sachem governed at least the remnants of one tribe. She also laid claim to territory in various places, and among the rest to what is now Concord, a grant of which place she joined with two or three other Indians in conveying to the original settlers, in 1635. Previous to this date, she bad taken a second husband, Wappacower, the chief priest of her tribe, he being by custom entitled to the hand of his Sachem's widow. The land was paid for in wampum, hatchets, hoes, knives, cotton cloth, and chintz; beside which, Wappacowet, who figured only as an evidence in the case, received a gratuity of a suit of cotton cloth, a hat, a white linen band, shoes, stockings, and a great coat.*

* Prince.

Several years after the sale of Concord, the Squaw-Sachem visited Boston, for the purpose of subjecting herself to the Massachusetts Government. That object she effected. Whether the priest was included in the submission, or what was the sequel of his history, or even her's, does, not appear.

The Squaw-Sachem, like her husband, the New Moon, has maintained her principal dignity in our early annals, as the parent of Wonohaquaham and Montowampate, better known as Sagamore John and Sagamore James. The former lived, before the English came, at the old residence of his father, in Medford; subsequently, at Winnesimet, anciently called Rumney Marsh, and situated partly in Chelsea, and partly in Saugus. James, who was Sachem of the Saugus Indians, and had jurisdiction of Lynn and Marblehead, resided on Sagamore hill, near the eastern end of Lynn beach.

John was one of the bost, as well as earliest friends the settlers of Boston ever had among the natives; and by their descendants his memory should be cherished for that, if for no other reason. On all occasions, he was courteous, kind and frank. Soon after their coming, he engaged with the governor to make * Depositions on Concord Records.

9

11: d

t There has been a controversy about the meaning of this title, and the difference between Sagamore, (or Sagamo) and Sachem. We agree with Mr. Lewis (from whose accurate history of Lynn we have borrowed above.) in considering them different pronunciations of the same word.

compensation for damages done by his subjects, and to fence in his territories, both which he did. During the same year, 1630, he seasonably gave warning to the Charlestown people, of a plot formed against them among some of the neighboring Indians,—an act on the mention of which an old writer pays him the deserved compliment of having 'always loved the English.'

His attachment was justified by the conduct of his new ally and friends, for though he often brought complaints before the Massachusetts authorities, it was as rarely without effect as it was without cause.

At one time, two of his wigwams were carelessly set on fire by some English fowlers, and destroyed. The chief offender was a servant of Sir Richard Saltonstall, and the Court ordered him to give satisfaction, which he did, being mulcted in seven yards of cloth, valued at fifty shillings sterling. The act of firing one of the buildings, was not very easily proved; but, say the Court, "lest he should think us not sedulous enough to find it out, and so should depart discontentedly from us, we gave both him and his subject satisfaction for them both."

So when he and his brother James, a few weeks afterwards, applied to the Governor for an order, to procure the return of twenty beaver-skins which had been obtained unfairly from them by an Englishman, "the governor entertained them kindly, and gave them his letter, &c."* John must have been permitted to manage his relations with other sachems also, as he pleased; for when Chickatabot fought for Canonicus in 1632, as we shall soon see, he also joined him at the head of thirty men, and the fact is recorded not only without censure, but without comment.

James was a more troublesome personage, and was more than once in difficulty with both Indians and English. A party of that formidable eastern people, the Tarratines, attacked him in 1631, slew seven of his men, wounded both him and his brother John, and carried off his wife captive. Hubbard observes, that he had treacherously killed some of the Tarratines before this, "and was therefore the less pitied of the English that were informed thereof:" but the latter nevertheless procured the redemption of his wife. The following extract from Mr. Winthrop's Journal, throws some light, both on the authority which he exercised upon his own subjects, and the liberties he took with the English. The Government, it must be observed, had made a prudent regulation, forbidding the sale of arms to the natives:

* New-England Chronology, 1631.

"September 4th, 1632.

"One Hopkins of Watertown was convict for selling a piece and pistol, with powder and shot, to James Sagamore, for which he had sentence to be whipped and branded in the cheek."—It was discovered by an Indian, one of James's men, upon promise of concealing him, or otherwise he was sure to be killed. It was probably for some offence of this description that James was once forbidden to enter any English plantation under penalty of ten beaver-skins; a much better dispensation of justice, clearly, than to have sent an armed force, as the good people of Plymouth had been in the habit of doing on such occasions, to punish him in person.

The following is an item in the account of Treasurer Pyncheon, stated to the General Court for 1632, under the head of Payments out of the Common Treasury.

5

d

to

adi

ID.

.vel

er,

12.12

ıd:

"Paid John Sagamore's brother, the 9th Oct. 1632, for killing a wolf, one coat at £0. 12s. 0."

This account of James indicates that he was much less known among the English than his brother; and as it appears in company of several charges like these,-

* Winthrop.

"To Jack Straw, one coat, by a note from the Governor, . . 12s.- To Wamascus' Son, two wolves, . . . . . . . £1: 4s.two coats.

It may be fairly inferred that the Sagamore hesitated not to put his dignity, so far as he was known, on a level, in the eyes of the English, with the lowest of his countrymen.

John and James died about the same time, in 1633, of a mortal epidemic then prevalent among the Massachusetts Indians. Hubbard says, that both promised, if they recovered from their sickness, to live with the English and serve their God. reason why John, at least, had not already taken such a course, may be gathered from some expressions in that curious tract, New England's First FRUITS, which we cite the more willingly because it places the character of John in its true light.

"Sagamore John," says the learned author, "Prince of Massaquesetts, was from our very first landing, more courteous, ingenious, and to the English more loving than others of them; he desired to learne and speake our language, and loved to imitate us in our behaviour and apparell, and began to hearken after our God and his ways. * * And did resolve and promise to leave the Indians and come live with us: but yet, kept down by feare of the scoffin of the Indians, had not power to make good his purpose, &c."

The same writer thus refers to the poor Sagamore's last moments. Being struck with death, we are told, he began fearfully to reproach himself that he had not lived with the English, and known their God. "But now," he added, "I must die. The God of the English is much angry with me, and will destroy me Ah! I was afraid of the scoffs of these wicked J dians. But my child shall live with the English heir God, when I am dead. I'll give him to ilson—he much good man, and much love Mr. Wilson, (clergyman at Boston,) was accorsent for, and when he attended, as he did lv. the Sagamore "committed his only child care, and so died."-In confirmation of this ble testimony, the author of the WONDER ng Providence may be cited. He observes, e English clergymen were much moved to see lians depart this life without the knowledge of Christ, "and therefore were very frequent them, for all the Noysomness of their Disease, g their Wigwams, and exhorting them in the of the Lord." John is said to have given some opes, as being always very courteous to them. ollows the request to Mr. Wilson: "Quoth hee, d by mee Mattamoy, [dead]—may bee my ve-you take them to teach much to know

Cotton, himself a preacher also at Boston, at ne period, and probably an eye-witness, fura more particular and interesting account of ene, with which we shall conclude our notice our first coming hither John Sagamore was the t Sachim in these parts. He falling sick, our Mr. Wilson hearing of it (and being of some ntance with him) went to visit him, taking one deacons of our Church with him, and withall, Mithridate and strong water. When he came odging, (which they call a Wigwam) hearing a within, hee looked over the mat of the door, to e what it meant, and saw many Indians gathogether, and some Powwaws amongst them, e their Priests, Physitians, and Witches. They rse spake earnestly to the sick Sagamore, and lisease, (in a way of charming of it and him)

inson speaks as if there were several sons, and is clearly incorrect. Mr. Cotton is much better it in this case.

and one to another in a kind of Antiphonies. When they had done, all kept silence, our Pastour went in with the Deacon, and found the man farre spent, his eyes set in his head, his speech leaving him, his mother (old Squaw-Sachim) sitting weeping at his Well (saith our Pastour) our God save Sagamore John, Powwaw Cram (that is, kill) Sagamore John: and thereupon hee fell to prayer with his Deacon, and after prayer forced into the sick man's mouth with a spoon, a little Mithridate dissolved in the strong water; soon after the Sagamore looked un. and three dayes after went abroad on hunting. providence so farre prevailed with the Sagamore, that he promised to look after the English man's God, to heare their sermons, to weare English apparell, &c. But his neighbor Indians, Sagamores, and Pointoness, hearing of this, threatened to Cram him (that is, to kill him) if he did so degenerate from his Countrey Gods, and Religion, he thereupon fell off, and took up his Indian course of life again. Whatsoever facility may seeme to offer itself of the conversion of the Indians, it is not so easie a matter for them to hold out, no not in a semblance of profession of the true Religion. Afterwards God struck John Sagamore againe, (and as I remember with the Small Pox:) but then when they desired like succour from our Pastour as before, he told them now the Lord was angry with Sagamore John, and it was doubtful hee would not so easily be intreated. The Sagamore blamed himself and justified God, and confessed, he should not have been discouraged by their threats from seeking our God: for those Sagamores and Powwaws who did most terrifie him, hee had seene God sweeping them away by death, before himself, in a short time after. therefore, when hee saw hee must die (for he died of that sickness) he left his sonne to the education of our Pastour, that he might keep closer to the English and to their God, than himself had done. But his sonne also died of the same disease soon after."* ther Sachem carried off by the pestilence was ATABOT, otherwise called Chickataubut and italbott; and whose name, under the form of mabak, is appended with those of eight other ns, to the deed of submission to King James, 1622, which has already been mentioned in the Massasoit. Some writers call him the Chief m of the Massachusetts. But so Sagamore and his mother, if not some others, were vaguetled: nor can any thing more be inferred from pressions, we conceive, than that he was one of rincipal chiefs. That conclusion might be also from the fact, that when the English new him (in 1621,) he was at war with the v-Sachem of Medford. No doubt he had been t to her husband, and probably she was now ling to continue and enforce the dominion.* same causes which enabled Chickatabot and mgamores of his section of the country, to in their independence of each other, probably ed them to submit so readily to whatever aur appeared able and willing to protect them. James, Massachusetts and Plymouth, were the to him, in this particular, with Massasoit and icus: and he submitted with an equal grace to either, as the case might require. No doubt it mce writing the above, we have availed ourselves. Shattuck's researches. He believes that Chickwas subject to Massasoit. One of his reasons is probability of his contending against his superior m; and another, the circumstance that all his red conveyances of land are south of Charles River, Mr. S. considers the southern boundary of the tehusetts. With deference to an accurate writer, all leave the question without an argument—only ding the reader that Chickatabot fought for Caus in 1632, that being about the time when the latade sundry attacks on Massasoit—and also that the fSassacus and Uncas, (not to refer to Powhatan's 7,) is a precedent exactly in point.

* THE WAY OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES CLEAR ED: London, 1648.

was the influence of the Pokanoket Sachem that induced him to visit Plymouth for the purpose of subscribing the submission—which he probably neither knew nor cared any thing about, except in relation to the promised consequences of the act of signing. With the same accommodating disposition, or rather from the same necessity, he turned out with all his men, in 1632—to fight against the same Massasoit, we suppose—the Narragansett Chief, Canonicus, having 'sent for him' to that end.* This movement, together with the absence of all comment upon it in history, illustrates sufficiently the sense which, notwithstanding the submissions alluded to, both himself and his English neighbors still entertain ed of his independence.

The Sachem took no advantage of the freedom thus silently allowed him. Nor does the liberality, and even courtesy, with which he was on all other occasions treated by the Massachusetts Government, appear to have had any other than the happiest effect upon him. On the contrary, he judged them as they judged him; and being seldom if ever suspected, was rarely exposed to suspicion by his conduct. He esteemed his own dignity at least enough to appreciate their politeness.

Residing near Neponset river, in Dorchester, he made himself familiar with the settlers of Boston very soon after their arrival, and that in a manner which discredits neither of the parties. As early as March, 1631, (the settlement having commenced in the preceding September,) he went into Boston, attended by quite a company of men and women of his tribe, and carrying with him a hogshead of Indian corn as a present for the Governor. When the latter had provided a dinner for his visitors, with the much esteemed accompaniment of 'tobacco and beer,' the Sachem sent his escort all home, with the exception of one sanop and one squaw, although it rained, and the Governor rather urged that they might be permitted to stay. He, and the other two who remained, tarried until afternoon of the next day but one. As he had before this time accustomed himself to wear English clothes, we are informed that "the Governor set him at his own table, where he behaved himself as soberly as an Englishman." His host gave him at parting, "cheese and pease, and a mug and some other things;" and no doubt he returned to Neponset exceedingly gratified with the well-timed munificence of his new friend.

* Winthrop.

Accordingly, he made his appearance again within a month, on which occasion he requested Mr. Winthrop to negotiate with some tailor, on his behalf, for a suit of English clothes. The Governor civilly gave him to understand, that English Sagamores were not accustomed to truck in this way-but he called his own tailor, and directed him to make the proposed suit. Chickatabot presented his host with two large skins of coat-beaver, so called, paid the proper houours to a dinner prepared for him and his attendants. and took his leave, promising to return for his clothes in three days. This was the 13th of April. On the 15th he came again, and the Governor then arrayed him in the new suit, which had been promptly made ready for his use, and also entertained him at dinner. If the Sachem had behaved soberly on his first visit, he deserves still higher praise for the improvement which is evident in his manners since that time. He would not eat now-savage as he was-at the hospitable board of his Christian host, until the latter had craved the customary blessing which attended his own meals; and, 'after meat, he desired him to do the like, and so departed.

Nor did Chickatabot receive only compliments and new clothes from his Boston ally. Substantial justice was rendered to him and his subjects, whenever emergency required; and an Englishman was punished, at least as promptly and severely for a trespase upon him or them, as an Indian would have been expected to be punished for the same offence against the whites. To illustrate by an instance,—in the latter part of 1631, Chickatabot appeared in Court at Boston, and complained of one Josias Plastowe, for stealing a quantity of his corn. Evidence of the charge having been produced, sufficient to convict the offender, the Court gave judgment as follows:

* Winthrop.

"It is ordered, that Josias Plastowe shall, for stealing four baskets of corn from the Indians, return them eight baskets again, be fined five pounds, and hereafter be called by the name of Josias, and not Mr. as formerly as he used to be; and that William Buckland and Thomas Andrew, [servants] shall be whipped for being accessary to the same offence."

Chicatabot knew how to value this honorable policy of the Government, and was grateful for it. But even earlier than the date of the transaction last referred to, he had himself set the example which that Government, so far as regarded him, did but follow. The following single paragraph, taken from the same authority which records the sentence of Plastowe, is among the evidence to this effect:

"At a Court, John Sagamore and Chickatabot, being told at last Court of some injuries that their men did to our cattle, and giving consent to make satisfaction, &c. now one of their men was complained of for shooting a pig, &c. for which Chickatabot was ordered to pay a small skin of beaver, which he presently paid." So in August of the next year, two of the Sachem's men having been proved guilty of assaulting some of the settlers at Dorchester in their houses, were detained in the bilboes, until Chickatabot could be notified of the fact, and requested to beat them, 'which he did.'*

*&quot; The most usuall custome amongst them," says Roger Williams, of the Indians, "is for the Sachim either to beate, or whip, or put to death with his owne hand, to

It is obvious to remark, how much more satisfacbry this course must have been to him, than the more violent mode of doing themselves justice, would have been, which was pursued by many English authorities on most occasions of a similar description. It was dealing with him, as they wished to be dealt with; which policy, whether under the circumstances required by strict justice or not, was unquestionably best calculated to effect the end proposed in each particular case, as well as to secure the general affection and respect of the Indians. It may be remarked here, without impropriety, that the conduct of the Massachusetts Government towards Chickatabot is no more than a just specimen of the course they usually pursued towards his countrymen. exceptions are few and far between.

It is specially worthy of notice, that Chickatabot was never called to account for the part which he took in the combination of the Indians against Master Weston's infamous settlement at Weymouth, of which we shall presently have occasion to make further mention. And yet, there was not only some reason for suspecting him, on account of his vicinity to the residence of the chief ringleaders; but it appears clearly, that he was known to be engaged, and that to such an extent, as to be considered by some the instigator and manager of the whole business. Witness, for example, the following extract from a letter written by Governor Dudley to the Countess of Lincoln, in England, and bearing date at Boston, March 12th, 1630:

"There was about the same time, one Mr. Weston, an English merchant, who sent divers men to plant and trade who sate down by the river of Wesaguscus; but these coming not for so good ends as those of Plymouth, sped not so well; for the most of them dying and languishing away, they who survived were rescued by those of Plymouth out of the hands of CHICK-ATALBOTT, and his Indians, who oppressed those weak English, and intended to have destroyed them,"* &c. The writer then goes on to mention a settlement soon after attempted near the same place by one Wollaston, and a company of some thirty men, whose history may be profitably noticed very briefly, for the purpose of comparing the Plymouth with the Massachusetts policy.

which the common sort most quietly submit." KEY TO

One of the Wollaston crew, mentioned by Prince, in 1625, as having been a kind of pettifogger in England, was Thomas Morton. This person became a notable disturber of the peace; cheating the Indians in trade, and spending the profits with his companions in rioting; drinking, as the annalist just cited specifies, "ten pound worth of wine and spirits in the morning," besides setting up a may-pole for the Indian women to drink and dance about, "with worser practices."

But although Thomas changed the name of Wollaston to Merry Mount, his jollity was not to last forever. Mr. Endecott, of the Massachusetts Company, who landed at Salem in the summer of 1628, visited Master Morton within two months from his arrival, and changing Merry Mount to Mount Dagon, took active measures for correcting that riotous settlement. These were not entirely successful, and even when Morton was at length arrested and sent to England for punishment, he was not only liberated, but sent back again: "upon which," as Prince writes, "he goes to his old nest at Merry Mount." This was in In the summer of the next year, the Massachusetts colonists came over with Winthrop and Dudley; and as early as September of that season, we find the following order taken upon Master Morton's case by the Court of Assistants:-

"Ordered, that Master Thomas Morton of Mount Wollaston shall presently be set in the bilbows, and after sent prisoner to England by the ship called the Gift; that all his goods be seized to defray the charge of his transportation, payments of his debts, and to give satisfaction to the Indians for a cance he took unjustly from them; and that his house be burnt down to the ground in sight of the Indians, for their satisfaction for many wrongs he has done them."

* Mass. His. Coll. † Prince's Annals, 1625.

If this summary course had been taken with Weston and his banditti, there might have been, as we shall see, the saving of the lives of many innocent men. If it could not be taken by the English, who were appealed to, some allowance at least might have been made for those who were finally compelled to assume the administration of justice.

In the case of Chickatabot, though not in all, such allowance was made. It also appears, that no evil consequences arose from this policy, but much the reverse. The sachem was uniformly the more ready to give all the satisfaction in his power, and no doubt partly because it was rather requested of him than required. When the Indians were said to be plotting against the English in 1632, and much apprehension was excited in consequence, "the three next Sagamores were sent for," says Winthrop, "who came presently to the Governor," and this is the last we hear of the matter. Chickatabot must have been one of them, and he explained away the causes of suspicions at once. Pursuing this course, the Massachusetts Government continued upon good terms with him until his death, which was occasioned by the prevalent epidemic, in the latter part of 1633.

His descendants, to the third generation at least, several of whom were persons of note, followed his own peaceful and friendly example. Among the Suffolk records, there is still to be seen, a quitclaim deed from his grandson Josias,—of Boston, the islands in the harbor, &c. "to the proprietated inhabitants of Boston."

CHAPTER II.

Farther account of Master Weston's settlement, and the movements of the Indians against him—ASPINET, the Nauset, supposed to be engaged in that affair—His tribe and power—Provocations from the English—Magnanimous revenge of the Sachem—His hospitality and kindness—Friendly intercourse with Plymouth—Is visited by governor Bradford—By captain Standish—Is suspected of hostility by Plymouth, and pursued by Standish—His death—Career and character of Iranough, the 'Courteous Sachem of Cummaquid'—Is suspected and pursued—His death.

Having necessarily, in the course of justice to some individuals heretofore noticed, animadverted on the early Indian policy of Plymouth, we shall devote this chapter to the further consideration of certain facts bearing upon that subject, and especially as connected with the case of Weston. These facts cannot be better set forth, than they are in the lives of two among the most remarkable natives who held intercourse with the Government in question.

One of them was ASPINET, the first open enemy, as the Pokanoket Sachem was the first ally, whom the Plymouth settlement had the fortune to meet with. He ruled over a number of petty tribes, settled in various parts of what is now the county of Barnstable, all of whom are said to have been ultimately subject, or at least subsidiary, to Massasoit. The principal among them were the Nausets, at Namskeket,* within the present limits of Orleans, and round about e cove which separates that town from Eastham. Vith this tribe Aspinet had his residence.

*A spot chosen with the usual sagacity of the Indians, and which at some period probably subsisted a large population with its immense stores of the sickishuog, or clam. A thousand barrels annually are said to have been taken there in modern times, merely for fish-bait Mass. His. Coll.

Aspinet, we have observed, was the first open eneaty of the colonists; and it will be admitted, that his ostility was not without cause. Of the twenty-four ndians kidnapped by Hunt, in 1614, twenty belonged o Patuzet, (or Plymouth,) and the residue were the subjects of the Nauset chieftain. When the Pilgrims came over, six years after this abominable outrage, thappened, that upon landing in the harbor of Cape Cod, before reaching Plymouth, they sent out a small party in a shallop, to discover a proper place for a settlement. These men went ashore a little north of the Great-Pond, in Eastham, and there they were suddenly attacked by the Nausets. The assailants were repulsed, but the English retreated in great haste.

Unquestionably, these men acted in obedience to the orders of Aspinet, instigated, as he must have been, by the remembrance of Hunt's perfidy. low, in his RELATION, gives an affecting incident which occurred subsequently at this place, going to Mustrate, very forcibly, the effect of such atrocious conduct on the disposition of the natives. hing," he says, " was grievous unto us at this place. There was an old woman, whom we judged to be no less than a hundred years old, which came to see us, because she never saw English; yet could not behold us without breaking forth into great passion, weeping and trying excessively. We demanding the reason of it; they told us she had three sons, who, when Master Hunt was in these parts, went aboard his ship to trade with him, and he carried them captives into Spain, by which means she was deprived of the comfort of her children in her old age!" The English made what explanation they could of the affair, and gave her a few "small trifles, which somewhat appeared her."

The expedition alluded to in this case, which took place in the summer of 1621, was occasioned by the absence of an English boy, who had strayed away II.—C from the colony at Plymouth, and was understood have fallen into Aspinet's hands. The accident ga that sachem an opportunity of gratifying his revens which to him might have appeared providential But he was too intelligent a man to confound the i nocent with the guilty; and too noble to avail himse of a misfortune, even for humbling the pride of a When, therefore, the English party, on the occasion, having landed on his coast, sent Squanto inform him amicably of the purpose for which the had come,-and with instructions perhaps to appe to his better feelings,—he threw down his enmity once with his arms. "After sun-set,"-is the minu but touching description given of this singular scene: "Aspinet came with a great train, and brought the boy with him, one bearing him through the water He had not less than an hundred with him, the he whereof came to the shallop-side unarmed with his the other stood aloof with their bows and arrow There he delivered up the boy, behung with beat and made peace with us, we bestowing a knife ( him; and likewise on another that first entertain the boy, and brought him thither. So they depart from us."* It was indeed a magnanimous revenge

After this auspicious interview, a friendly inte course was maintained for more than a year between the English and the Nausets. Supplies of corn, bear and other provision, were obtained of them to a large amount, at a period when the colonists were reduce almost to famine. The trade was conducted on bot sides with justice, and therefore with confidence Governor Bradford, when he touched at Namskekt was treated with the highest respect. On one occasion, his shallop being stranded, it was necessary to stack the corn which had been purchased, and the leave it, covered with mats and sedge, in the care the Indians. The Governor and his party travelle home, fifty miles, on foot. The corn remained as the corn which had been purchased, and the care the Indians. The Governor and his party travelle home, fifty miles, on foot.

* JOURNAL OF A PLANTATION.

from November to the following January, and nother shallop touched at Nauset, it was found ect safety. All this is attributed to Aspinet: Sachim," we are told, "used the Governor very The Indians were promised a reward for future good care of the corn; "which they ook, and the Sachim promised to make good!" ain. "the Sachim sent men to seek the shalnd then sent the shallop to Plymouth within avs. manifested the same good feeling and good other times. When Standish landed at Nauthe winter of 1622-3, an Indian crawled into llop about dusk, as it lay in a narrow creek. rried off some beads, scissors and other small The captain soon discovered the theft, and some of his crew with him, he went immeto Aspinet, made his complaint, and demanded, me bravadoes that either the articles or the d should be delivered to him forthwith. 1 took no offence at his plainness of speech: being prepared to give satisfaction on the inery composedly offered his visiter the hospiof his wigwam till the matter could be settled These were rejected, and Standish ould be. d to his 'rendezvous' on the shore. The next g. Aspinet made his appearance. He came ng down to the shore, with considerable pomp umstance, attended by an escort of his subjects, v numerous enough to have overwhelmed the rty of Standish, and never at any former time vanting in courage. But the object was to do and not to enforce wrong. He approached stain and saluted him by thrusting out his "that one might see the root thereof, and th licked his hand from the wrist to the finad, withal bowing the knee, to imitate the i gesture, being instructed therein formerly by ntum." His men followed the example as well were able, but so awkwardly, with all their zeal, as to furnish no little amusement for the civilized spectators of the scene. Aspinet now gave up the stolen articles, observing that he had beaten the thief soundly, and "seeming to be very sorry for the fact, but glad to be reconciled." The interview closed with a liberal provision of excellent bread upon his part, which he had ordered his women to bake and bring in whatever quantities it was wanted.

But notwithstanding all the pains which the chief of the Nausets took to maintain a good understanding with his new neighbors, he was destined to incur their suspicion, and to meet with a miserable ruin under the weight of their hostility. When the English visited Massasoit, in his sickness, early in 1623, that chieftain disclosed to them, by the medium of Hobamock, the particulars of an extensive combination, reported to be formed among the Indian tribes, "against Master Weston's colony at Weymouth," as Winslow expresses it, "and so against us." The Massachusetts Indians were ringleaders in the affair, it was said; but Aspinet, and the sachems of many other settlements, including even Capawack, (Martha's Vineyard) were charged with being privy to it.

Whether they were so or not, need not be discussed, and cannot be decided. It is observable, however, in relation to Aspinet, that the evidence of Massasoit, which was the only evidence in the case, went to show, that "the men of Massachusetts," were the authors of the intended business." This very much confirms our conclusion to the same effect, in the Life of Chickatabot. But, granting all that is charged, it may easily be imagined how much provocation the Indians had received from Weston's notorious banditti, and how much reason they had to make common cause against them in their own self-defence. Winslow himself bears witness, that immediately after Weston's settlement was commenced, "the Indians filled our ears with clamors against them, for stealing their corn, and other abuses;" as also that the Plymth Government "knew no way to redress those abu-save reproof."

It seems to have been hardly considered,—when English undertook to wage a preventative or prentionary war, as they did, upon all the parties acsed by Massasoit,—not only that the good Sachem ght be misinformed by rivals or enemies of those ries; and that there might be a fault upon their ra side; but also that the Indians might well be sposed to punish the Weymouth ruffians, without cessarily carrying their hostilities any farther.
iew looked upon Weston's clan as one tribe, and upthe Plymouth people as another; and the con-

the Plymouth people as another; and the conct of the two settlements respectively had hitherto ren good cause for the distinction.

But whatever was the truth or justice of the case, result is a matter of no uncertainty. Captain andish proceeded to 'try his conclusions,' according the phraseology of the times, much as John Smith ould have done in his stead, upon such of the saves as were most suspected. Several were killed, unded and captured, "and this sudden and unexted execution," writes our historian, "together h the just judgement of God upon their own guilconsciences, so terrified and amazed the other peowho intended to join with the Massachuseuks wingt us, as in like manner they forsook their houunst us, as in like manner they forsook their hourunning to and fro like men distracted,—living the swamps, and other desert places,—and so ught manifold diseases amongst themselves, wherevery many are dead." Among these unfortunate sons was the Sachem of Nauset: and thus misery perished a man at least deserving the credit of ring rendered numerous and generous favors to a pple, who had been in the first instance flagrant spassers upon his dominion, as they were finally cause of his death.

YANOUGH, sometimes entitled the 'Courteous Sam of Cummaquid,' ruled over the Indians at that ce, which was otherwise called Mattakees, or Mattakiest, and was included in what has since been the eastern part of the township of Barnstable and the western part of Yarmouth.

The kindness of the Sachem and his subjects towards such of the English as first made their acquaintance, amply accounts for the compliment implied in his title. The same party which, as we have seen, went in pursuit of the Plymouth boy, put in at Cummaguid for the first night, and unfortunately anchored in a situation, where at low water they found themselves aground. In the morning they espied savages near the shore, looking for lobsters. Squanto was sent to inform them of the object of the visit of the English, and to assure them of their friendly disposition. Thus addressed, the Indians answered that the boy was very well, but at Nauset; yet, since the English were so near their territory, it was hoped they would take the trouble to come ashore and eat with them. The invitation was accepted by six of the party, who landed as soon as their shallop was afloat, leaving four of the Indians voluntary hostages with the residue of the crew.

They were conducted to the residence of Ivanough; a man described as not exceeding twenty six years of age, but very personable, gentle, courteous, fair-conditioned, and indeed not like a savage, save for his attire.* This entertainment is said to have been answerable to his 'parts,' and his cheer plentiful and various. The English tarried with him until after dinner, and then reembarked for Nauset; Iyanough and two of his men going with them on board the shallop. The latter returned on foot, when the design of the expedition was accomplished. The English sailed for Plymouth with a head wind, but were obliged to put in again for the shore, where they met with their fellow-passenger, the Sachem. He came out to greet them, with most of his subjects, in company, men, women and children: "and being still o gratify us," says the historian, " took a rundled our men in the dark a great way for wacould find none good; yet brought such as s on his neck with them." In the meantime, nen joined hand in hand, and began to dance g upon the stand near the shallop; the men all the kindness in their power; and the w ended with Iyanough himself taking a from about his neck, and hanging it upon the person who acted as the leader of the His visitors took their leave of him, and l's providence came safely home that night." at we hear of lyanough, after this, goes to the estimate which these particulars induce orm of his character. He supplied the coloa large quantity of provisions, in a period of ed; and as late as February 1623, when Stannt to Mattakiest on a similar errand, it is adhat he not only 'pretended' his wonted love. red a good quantity of corn to confirm the The account given of that meeting closes following language. It is the more noticealustrating the temper of Standish in cases of ent and the kind of evidence against the Iny which, through him, the colonists were likesatisfied. ngers," writes the historian, " also came to this retending only to see him (Standish,) and his y, whom they never saw before that time. ading to join with the rest to kill them, as afared. But being forced through extremity [of to lodge in their houses, which they much God possessed the heart of the Captain with ousy, giving strait command, that as one part ompany slept, the rest should wake, declaring ings which he understood, whereof he could good constructions." We are then informed, ne beads were stolen from him in the night.

* Winslow's RELATION.

Upon this, he drew out his men, and stationed them around the wigwam of Iyanough, where many of his people were collected. He threatened to fall upon them forthwith, unless satisfaction should be made; and seated his indignation upon the Sachem with an especial emphasis. Iyanough exerted himself to discover the criminal. An adjustment of the difficulties was at length effected; and then the Indians good humouredly brought in corn enough to fill the shallop. "Finally, this accident so daunted their courage, as they durst not attempt any thing against him; so that through the good means and providence of God they returned in safety."

It is not difficult to be seen that there was more prejudice against Ivanough and his subjects, than proof. Their hospitality only made them suspected. On the other hand, the real hostility which they may or may not have felt towards the scoundrels and thieves who composed Master Weston's settlement at Weymouth, was first taken for granted, and then amplified into a cause of premature retaliation on the part of the people of Plymouth. It was about this very time, that the Indians were making the most urgent complaints against Weston—" how exceedingly." to quote again from the RELATION itself, "that? company abased themselves by undirect means to get victuals from the Indians;" and how "others by night robbed the Indians' store, for which they had been publickly stocked and whipped, and yet there was little amendment," &c.

If Iyanough had indeed shown himse!f a little shy of his old acquaintances in the case last alluded to, it were not much to be wondered at; especially considering the violence of the worthy but warm-blooded captain, and also the fact that Plymouth, though duly and distinctly appealed to, had given the Indians no redress. It is somewhere intimated in the ancient journals, that certain Indians,—and testimony of this kind seems to have been received without much suspicion,—stated that Iyanough had been solicited to join assachusetts against the whites. But this cerif true, was no crime. Massasoit himself acedged, that he was solicited.

the whole, not to enlarge on the minutize of a rhich at best can afford no pleasure to those el their own honor involved in the memory of sh and his Plymouth brethren, we can hardly the fate of the kind and gentle lyanough, the ous Sachem, on his own soil, in the prime of his vithout a blush and a sigh together for the misrithout a blush and a sigh together for the misrithout and the misfortune. Insulted, threatened, purvy an enemy whom no restitution could satisfy, so suspected equally his caresses and fears, he consternation and died in despair.

CHAPTER III.

Summary account of the Five Nations—Their early history—Government—Conquests—Population—Territory—Intercourse with European Colonies—Their war with the Adirondacks—Adventures of Piskarer—Their negotiations with the French, in 1684—Anecdotes of the Onondaga Chief, Garangula—His speech at the Council, and effects of it—Remarks on his character—History of the Five Nations continued to the time of Adardo—His exploits—Their object and results—War between the confederates and the French—Adventures of Black-Kettle.

Having concluded our notices of the most eminent Indians of New-England, it now becomes proper following merely the progress of history, to turn ou attention to another section of country, and to a per od of time which has not yet furnished us any co siderable share of its abundant material. We re to the Middle States, and particularly to a large p tion of the State of New-York, which, with of neighboring territory, was formerly occupied by famous confederacy commonly called, by the l lish, the Five Nations. Owing to circumsta not necessary here to be detailed, these tribesas an almost necessary consequence, all the tinguished individuals they produced-came for in their intercourse with the foreign colonies them, to fill the prominent station before filled Indians of New-England, much as the latter. their turn, succeeded the red men of the Sou,

The Five Nations were the Mohawks, the das, the Cayugas, the Onondagas and the The Virginian Indians gave them the name sawomekes; the Dutch called them Maquekakuase; and the French, Iroquois. The home was the Mingoes, and sometimes the schion, or United People.* on the French settled in Canada, in 1603, they he Iroquois living where Montreal now stands. vere at war with the Adirondacks,—a powere residing three hundred miles above Troiss,-in consequence of the latter having treachmurdered some of their young men. Preo this date, their habits had been more agriculan warlike; but they soon perceived the neof adopting a different system. The Adironlrove them from their own country, and they ed to the borders of the lakes, where they have ace lived. This misfortune it was, -ostensibly a misfortune,-which gave the earliest imthe subsequent glorious career of these Rof the West.

unately for them, their sachems were men of is and spirit which adversity served only to te and renew. They, finding their countryscouraged by the discomfiture suffered on the of the St. Lawrence, induced them to turn ms against a less formidable nation, called the s, then dwelling with themselves near the

That people they subdued, and expelled from rritory. Encouraged by success, and strengthy discipline, they next ventured to defend lves against the inroads of their old conquerthe north; and at length the Adirondacks were riven back, in their turn, as far as the neighd of what is now Quebec.

The French made a new emergency arose. on cause with the nation just named against remies, and brought to the contest the important civilized science and art. The Five Nations w to set wisdom and wariness, as well as courdiscipline, against an alliance so powerful vernor Clinton's Discourse before N. Y. H. Soci-311.

Their captains came forward again, and taught them the policy of fighting in small parties, and of making amends for inferior force, by surprisal and stratagem. The result was, that the Adirondacks were nearly exterminated, while the Iroquois, proudly exalting themselves on their overthrow, grew rapidly to be the leading tribe of the whole north, and finally of the whole continent.

The efforts necessary to attain that ascendant, may be fairly estimated from the character of the first vanquisher and the first victim. The Adirondacks fought long and desperately. In the end they adopted their adversaries' plan of sending out small parties, and of relying especially on their captains. Five of these men, alone, are said, by their astonishing energy and bravery to have well nigh turned the balance of the war.

One of the number was PISKARET, in his own day the most celebrated chieftain of the north. his four comrades solemnly devoted themselves to the purpose of redeeming the sullied glory of the nation, at a period when the prospect of conquest, and perhaps of defence, had already become desperate. They set out for Trois Rivieres in one canoe: each of them being provided with three muskets, which they loaded severally with two bullets, connected by a small chain ten inches in length. In Sorel River, they met with five boats of the Iroquois, each having on board ten men. As the parties rapidly came together, the Adirondacks pretended to give themselves up for lost, and began howling the death-song. This was continued till their enemy was just at hand. They then suddenly ceased singing, and fired simultaneously on the five canoes. The charge was repeated with the arms which lay ready loaded, and the slight birches of the Iroquois were torn asunder, and the frightened occupants tumbled overboard as fast as possible. Piskaret and his comrades, after knocking as many of them on the head as they pleased, reserved the remainder to feed their revenge, which was soon afterwards done by burning them alive in the most cruel tortures.

This exploit, creditable as it might be to the actors the eyes of their countrymen, served only to shar-Pen the fierce eagerness for blood which still raged in the bosom of Piskaret. His next enterprise was ar more hazardous than the former: and so much more so, indeed, even in prospect, that not a single warrior would bear him company. He set out alone, therefore for the country of the Five Nations, (with which he was well acquainted,) about that period of the spring when the snow was beginning to melt. Accustomed, as an Indian must be, to all emergencies of travelling as well as warfare, he took the precaution of putting the hinder part of his snow-shoes forward, so that if his footsteps should happen to be observed by his vigilant enemy, it might be supposed he was gone the contrary way. For further security he went along the ridges and high grounds, where the mow was melted, that his track might be lost.

On coming near one of the villages of the Five Nations, he concealed himself until night, and then entered a cabin, while the inmates were fast asleep, murdered the whole family, and carried the scalps to his lurking-place. The next day, the people of the village sought for the murderer, but in vain. He came out again at midnight, and repeated his deed of blood. The third night, a watch was kept in every house, and Piskaret was compelled to exercise more caution. But his purpose was not abandoned. bundled up the scalps he had already taken, to carry home with him as a proof of his victory, and then stole warily from house to house, until he at last discovered an Indian nodding at his post. This man he despatched at a blow, but that blow alarmed the neighborhood, and he was forced immediately to fly has life. Being, however, the fleetest Indian then live, he was under no apprehension of danger from the chase. He suffered his pursuers to approach him from time to time, and then suddenly darted away from them, hoping in this manner to discourage a well as escape them. When the evening came on, he hid himself, and his enemies stopped to rest. Feeling no danger from a single enemy, and he a fugitive they even indulged themselves in sleep. Piskaret who watched every movement, turned about, knock every man of them on the head, added their scalps to his bundle, and leisurely resumed his way home.

H.--D

To return to the Five Nations. The career of vic tory, which began with the fall of the Adirondacks was destined to be extended beyond all precedent it the history of the Indian tribes. They exterminated the Eries or Erigas, once living on the south side of the lake of their own name. They nearly destroyed the powerful Anderstez, and the Chouanons or Show anons. They drove back the Hurons and Ottawas among the Sioux of the Upper Mississippi, when they separated themselves into bands, "proclaiming wherever they went, the terror of the Iroquois." The Illinois on the west also were subdued, with the Miamies and the Shawanese. The Niperceneans of the St. Lawrence fled to Hudson's Bay, to avoid their fury. "The borders of the Outaouis," says at historian, "which were long thickly peopled, became almost deserted." The Mohawk was a name of ter ror to the farthest tribes of New-England; and though but one of that formidable people should appear for a moment on the hills of the Connecticut or Massa chusetts, the villages below would be in an uproar or confusion and fear. Finally they conquered the trib of Virginia, west of the Alleghanies; and warre against the Catawbas, Cherokees, and most of th nations of the South.

The result of this series of conquests, was, that the Five Nations finally became entitled, or at least laiclaim, to all the territory not sold to the English, from the mouth of Sorel River, on the south side of lake Erie and Ontario, on both sides of the Ohio, until into the Mississippi; and on the north side of lakes, the whole tract between the Outawas rivid lake Huron.* The historian, Douglas, estistheir territory at about 1200 miles in length, north to south, and from 700 to 800 miles in lth.

* Herriot's History of Canada.

ne most moderate account of their population we seen, was published by an Agent of Virginia, held a conference at Albany with their chiefs, 77. The warriors were then numbered as fol-

Oneidas,	- 300 200
Onondagas,	- 350 300 1000
Total,	2150

would make the whole population about 7000.

1 so late as the Revolutionary war, the British in their service, according to the calculation of own agents,

Mohawks,	-		-	-	-	-	300
Oneidas, -		-	-	-	-	-	150
Onondagas,	-	-	-	-	-	-	300
Cayugas, -	-	-	-	-	-	_	230
Senecas,	-	_	_	-	-	-	400

vhich must be added 200 Tuscaroras—a tribe exd from North Carolina in 1712, and received by live Nations, to constitute a sixth member of the federacy. We must also add 220 warriors who red to the United States. The whole number ally engaged in the contest would then amount 300.

he Five Nations entered into a treaty of peace

* Smith's History of New-York.

with the Dutch soon after their settlement in New-York. They treated with the English subsequently on the same terms; and this memorable engagement remained inviolate for more than a century, during all the revolutions and machinations of the French and English governments, on either side. With the former of these people they were often at war.

About the year 1684, the French availed themselves of a peace with the Five Nations, to build forts at several important places on the northern waters, and to make many arrangements for extending their dominion and commerce among the numerous tribes of the north and west. Their only opposition came from the Confederates. The Senecas who were the most numerous and the nearest, were particularly troublesome in cutting off supplies of ammunition, sent by the French among their tribes, who hunted for them. At length, M. De la Barre, the Governor of Canada, complained of these injuries to the English, who were known to have great influence over their Indian allies. Meanwhile he took vigorous measures for frightening the Five Nations into friendship. He ordered his vessels on the lakes to be repaired: and collected at Cadaragui fort all the forces of Canada. But the nature of the soil at this station. where he was detained six weeks in the heat of summer, occasioned sickness and embarrassment in his army, and he found the prospect utterly hopeless of effecting any thing, unless it might be by treaty. He sent messengers, therefore, to some of the Five Nations, to induce a negotiation.

These movements the English Commander at Albany, Colonel Dungan, exerted himself to counteract. The Mohawks and Senecas promised him that they would not go near the French. But the remaining three tribes would not even hear the messages he sent them, except in presence of the priests and other deputies who had already brought an invitation from the French Governor to meet him in Council, at Kaiho-hage.* "Should we not go to him after all this entreaty," said they in answer to the English, "when has come so far, and so near to us? Certainly. If we do not, we shall deserve no favour. You say we are subjects to the King of England and the Duke of York. We say we are brethren, and take care of ourselves."

The event justified this independence. The most distinguished of the confederate chieftains was Garaneula, the pride of the Onondaga tribe. He was now advanced in years, but had lost nothing of his energies. Taking thirty warriors with him, he went with La Maine, the French Deputy, to meet the Canadian Governor at Kaihohage. At the end of two days after reaching that place, a Council was held. The French officers formed a semi-circle on one side, which the Indians completed on the other; and the Governor then addressed himself to Garangula.

"The King, my master," he began, "being informed that the Five Nations have often infringed the peace, has ordered me to come hither with a guard. and to send Ohguesse (La Maine) to the Onondagas, to bring the Chief Sachem to my camp." He then went on to require Garangula,—as a condition precedent to the treaty which might be granted him,—to promise, in the name of the Five Nations, that entire reparation should be given the French for the past, and entire security for the future. In case of refusal, they were threatened with war. Again, they were charged with violence committed upon the French traders, and upon Indian nations under French protection; and with having introduced the English to trade in the neighborhood of the lakes. This also was cause of war. Finally, said the Governor, with no very scrupulous regard to truth, upon one point at least, "I shall be extremely grieved if my words do not produce the effect I anticipate from them; for

* On Lake Ontario, and called by the French La-Famine.

t Colden's History of the Five Nations.

then I shall be obliged to join with the Governor of New-York, who is commanded by his master to assis me, and burn the castles of the Five Nations, and de stroy you."

This crafty speech was designed to strike a terro into the Indians; and Garangula was undoubtedly surprised by a style of expression which contrasted so strongly with the smooth and soft words of La Maine and the priests. But fear never entered his bosom and he had the additional advantage of good informa tion respecting the true state of the French Army He knew that the Governor's insolence proceeded in fact from his impotence; bravado was his last resort During the speech, however, he manifested no emotion of any kind, but kept his eyes composedly fixed on the end of his own pipe. But the moment the Governor had ceased, he rose up, walked five or six times about the council-circle, and then returned to his place, where he spoke standing, while La Barre remained in his elbow-chair.

"Yonondio!" he began—addressing the Governor by the title always given to that Canadian officer by the Five Nations—"Yonondio!—I honor you, and the warriors that are with me all likewise honor you Your interpreter has finished your speech; I now begin mine. My words make haste to reach your ears. Hearken to them.

"Yonondio!—You must have believed when you left Quebec, that the sun had burnt up all the forests which render our country inaccessible to the French or that the lakes had so far overflown the banks, that they had surrounded our castles, and that it was impossible for us to get out of them. Yes, surely you must have dreamed so, and the curiosity of seeing so great a wonder, has brought you so far. Now you are undeceived. I and the warriors here present, are come to assure you, that the Senecas, Cayugus, Onondagas, Oneidas and Mohawks are yet alive. I thank you in their name, for bringing back into their countries the calumet, which your predecessor received from their hands. It was happy for you, that you left under ground that murdering hatchet, so often dyed in the blood of the French.

"Hear, Yonondio!—I do not sleep. I have my eyes open. The sun, which enlightens me, discovers to me a great captain at the head of a company of soldiers, who speaks as if he were dreaming. He says, that he only came to the lake to smoke on the great calumet with the Onondagas. But Garangula says, that he sees the contrary; that it was to knock them on the head, if sickness had not weakened the arms of the French. I see Yonondio raving in a camp of sick men, whose lives the Great Spirit has saved by inflicting this sickness on them.

"Hear Yonondio!—Our women had taken their clubs, our children and old men had carried their bows and arrows into the heart of your camp, if our warriors had not disarmed them, and kept them back, when your messenger came to our castles. It is done and I have said it.

e

۲

y. In

r.

0-ed be

3

ı

Hear, Yonondio!—We plundered none of the French, but those that carried guns, powder and balls to the Twightwies and Chictaghicks, because those arms might have cost us our lives. Herein we follow the example of the Jesuits, who break all the kegs of rum brought to our castles, lest the drunken Indians should knock them on the head. Our warriors have not beaver enough to pay for all the arms they have taken, and our old men are not afraid of the war. This belt preserves my words.

"We carried the English into our lakes, to trade there with the Utawawas and Quatoghies, as the Adirondacks brought the French to our castles, to carry on a trade, which the English say is theirs. We are born free. We neither depend on Yonondio nor Corlear." We may go where we please, and carry with us whom we please, and buy and sell what we please. If your allies be your slaves, use them as such, command them to receive no other but your people. This belt preserves my words.

The name they gave the Governors of New-York.

"We knock the Twightwies and Chictaghicks on the head, because they had cut down the trees of peace, which were the limits of our country. They have hunted beaver on our lands. They have acted contrary to the customs of all Indians, for they left none of the beavers alive,—they killed both male and female. They brought the Satanas into their country, to take part with them, after they had concerted ill designs against us. We have done less than either the English or French, that have usurped the lands of so many Indian nations, and chased them from their own country. This belt preserves my words.

9

Ξ

ŋ

"Hear, Yonondio!—What I say is the voice of all the Five Nations. Hear what they answer. Open your ears to what they speak. The Senecas, Cayugas, Onondagas, Oneidas and Mohawks say, that when they buried the hatchet at Cadarackui, in the presence of your predecessor, in the middle of the fort, they planted the tree of peace in the same place, to be there carefully preserved: That in the place of a retreat for soldiers, that fort might be a rendezvous for merchants: that in place of arms and ammunition of war, beavers and merchandize should only enter there.

"Hear, Yonondio!—Take care for the future that so great a number of soldiers as appear there, do not choke the tree of peace planted in so small a fort. It will be a great loss, if, after it had so easily taken root, you should stop its growth, and prevent its covering your country and ours with its branches. I assure you, in the name of the Five Nations, that our warriors shall dance to the calumet of peace under its leaves. They shall remain quiet on their mats, and shall never dig up the hatchet, till their brother Yonondio, or Corlear, shall either jointly or separately endeavor to attack the country, which the Great Spirit has given to our ancestors. This belt preserves my words, and this other the authority which the Five Nations have given me."

Here the orator paused for a moment, and then addressed himself to Monsieur Le Maine, who stood near him, acting as interpreter. "Take courage, Ohguesse!" said he, "You have spirit." Speak! Explain my him, acting as interpreter. "Take courage, Ohguesse!" said he, "You have spirit—Speak! Explain my words. Forget nothing. Tell all that your brethren and friends say to Yonondio, your Governor, by the mouth of Garangula, who loves you, and desires you to accept of this present of beaver, and take part with me in my feast, to which I invite you. This present of beaver is sent to Yonondio, on the part of the Five Nations."

When this harangue was explained to the Governor, he quietly left the council, and withdrew to his tent, disappointed and much incensed. Garangula, on the other hand, feasted the French officers, and then went home. Nothing more was heard of the treaty; and the French troops, who had been ordered out, soon after made the best of their way to their own habitations.

The genuineness of the speech we have given above, seems to be past dispute. It was recorded on the spot by that enlightened historian, Baron La Hontan, from whom Colden and other subsequent writers have borrowed it. Considering the circumstances under which it was delivered, and especially the surprise practiced by the Governor, it may certainly be regarded as an evidence of astonishing sagacity, spirit, and self-possession. Its proud courtesy, so different from the Frenchman's boisterous parade of idle threats, only adds to the sting of its sarcasm, as the imagery gives weight to the argument. An illustrious statesman and scholar has placed it in the same rank with the celebrated speech of Logan.* But the fame of Garangula must, at all events, rest upon this effort, for history makes no mention of him subsequent to the council of Kaihohage.

* Discourse of Gov. Clinton.

About three years after that transaction, another personage distinguished himself as much as the Onondaga Chief, though in a very different manner. This was Adario, Chief Sachem of the Dinondadies, a tribe generally found among those in the French interest. and opposed both to the Five Nations and the Eng-The former Government had consequently treated them with favor. But, notwithstanding these circumstances, they had latterly shown a strong disposition to trade with the English—and especially upon one occasion, when the latter, guided by the Five Nations, had opened a commerce on the frontiers of That affair, as Adario now observed, made them obnoxious to their ancient ally, the French; and he therefore resolved, by some notable exploit, to redeem the character of his nation.

Full of this purpose, he marched from Michilimackinac, at the head of a hundred men; and to act with the greater security, he took Cadaraqui fort in his way, for intelligence. The Commandant there informed him, that the Governor was now in expectation of concluding a peace with the Five Nations, and of receiving a visit from their ambassadors in eight or ten days, at Montreal. He desired him to return home, without attempting any thing which might obstruct so good a design.

But Adario had another project in view. The Commandant's information convinced him of the danger there was that his own nation, in the new arrangement, might be sacrificed to the French interest. Deliberating on the means proper to prevent such a result, he took leave of the officer, but not to return home. Knowing the route by which the Iroquois must necessarily come, he lay wait for them, with his company, at one of the falls of Cadaraqui river. Here he had patiently waited four or five days, when the Deputies made their appearance, guarded by forty young soldiers. These were suddenly set upon by the ambuscade, and all who were not killed were taken prisoners. When the latter were secured, Adario approach by the Governor of Canada, he had secured this pass with the almost certain prospect of intercepting them.

The Deputies were of course very much surprised at the Governor's conduct; and they finally expressed themselves with such freedom, as to declare the whole object of their journey. Adario was, in his turn, apparently amazed and enraged. He swore revenge upon the Governor, for having, as he said, made a tool of him, to commit his abominable treachery. Then, looking steadfastly on the prisoners, he said to them, "Go, my brothers!—I untie your bands. I send you home again, though our nations be at war. The French Governor has made me commit so black an action, that I shall never be easy after it, till the Five Nations shall have had full revenge." The Deputies, furnished with ammunition and arms for their journey, and completely satisfied of the truth of Adario's declarations, returned to their own country, after having assured him that he and his nation might make their peace when they pleased.

This master-stroke of policy was seconded by an incident which occurred soon afterwards, and which the same cunning and vigilant spirit profited by to promote his design. In the surprisal of the Deputies, Adario had lost one man, and had filled his place with a Satana prisoner, who had been before adopted into the Five Nations. This man he soon afterwards delivered to the French at Michilimackinac, probably at their request; and they, for the purpose of keeping up the enmity between the Dinondadies and Five Nations, ordered him to be shot. Adario called one of the latter people, who had long been a prisoner, to be an eve-witness of his countryman's death. He then bade him make his escape to his own country, and there to give an account of the ferocious barbarity from which he had been unable to save a captive belonging to himself.

The Five Nations had already been upon the brink of war, in consequence of the representations of the Deputies. Their rage was now beyond all bounds. The Governor, having obtained some information of the state of things, sent messengers to disavow and expose the conduct of Adario; but they would listen to no messages; their souls thirsted for revenge. The war was undertaken immediately, and never was one more disastrous to Canada. Twelve hundred of the Iroquois invaded the province, while the French were still uncertain whether hostilities would commence. In July, 1688, they landed at La Chine, on the south side of the island of Montreal; and, keeping the Governor himself, with his troops, confined within the walls of the town, they sacked all the plantations, and indiscriminately massacred men, women, and children. More than one thousand of the French were killed, and many were carried off captive, who afterwards shared the same fate. The Indian army lost but three men during the whole expedition.

The most distinguished of the Iroquois warriors about this time, was one whom the English called BLACK-KETTLE. Colden speaks of him as a 'famous hero: but few of his exploits have come down to these times. It is only known that he commanded large parties of his countrymen, who were exceedingly troublesome to the French. In 1691, he made an irruption into the country round Montreal, at the head of several hunared men. He overran Canada, (say the French annalists,) as a torrent does the low lands, when it overflows its banks, and there is nowithstanding it. The troops at the stations received orders to stand upon the defensive; and it was not until the enemy were returning home victorious, after having desolated all Canada, that a force of four hundred soldiers was mustered to pursue them. Black-Kettle is said to have had but half that number with him at this juncture, but he gave battle, and fought desperately. After losing twenty men slain, with some prisoners, he broke through the French ranks and marched off, leaving a considerable number of the enemy wounded and killed.

CHAPTER IV

Five Nations continued. Remarks on their oratory—Circumstances favorable to it—Account of a council of the Confederates at Onondaga, in 1690—Anecdotes of various persons who attended it—Speeches of Sadekanatie and other orators—Adarahta—The history and character of Decaresora—Hisspeeches at the Albany council of 1694—Style of his eloquence—His personal and political character—Other speeches and negotiations—Anecdotes of Sadekanatie.

Enough perhaps has already appeared respecting the Five Nations to justify the observation of an eminent writer, that they were no less celebrated for eloquence than for military skill and political wisdom.* The same obvious circumstances prompted them to exce ence in all these departments; but in the former, their relations with each other and with other tribes, together with the great influence which their reputation and power attached to the efforts of their orators abroad, gave them peculiar inducements, facilities and almost faculties for success. Among the Confederates, as among the Indians of all the East and South, a high respect was cherished for the warrior's virtues; but eloquence was a certain road to popular fivour. Its services were daily required in consultations at home and communications abroad. The coundi-room was frequented like the Roman forum and be senate-house of the Greeks. Old and young went there together; the one for discipline and disfaction, and the other "to observe the passing scenes, and to receive the lessons of wisdom."

The kind of oratory for which Garangula and other public speakers of his Confederacy were distin guished, it cannot be expected of us to analyse with much precision. Indian oratory is generally pointed direct, undisguised, unpolished; but forcible in ex pression and delivery, brilliant in flashes of imagery and naturally animated with graphic touches of hu mor, pathos, or sententious declaration of high-tone principle,—according in some measure to the occasior but more immediately to the momentary impulse of the speaker as supported by his prevalent talent. It the orators of the Five Nations differed much from this description, it was in qualities which they owed independently of genius, to their extraordinar opportunities of practice, and to the interest taker in their efforts by the people who heard, employed and obeyed them.

*Governor Clinton.

"The speakers whom I have heard," says Mr. Col den, "had all a great fluency of words, and much mor grace in their manner, than any man could expect among a people entirely ignorant of the liberal art and sciences." He adds, that he had understood them to be—(not knowing their language himself)—very nice in the turn of their expressions; though it seems but few of them were such masters of the art as nevertoffend their Indian auditories by an unpolite expression. Their greatest speakers attained to a sort of urbanitas or atticism.*

For the purpose of better illustrating some point which are barely alluded to in these observations, a well as to introduce several new characters, not easily appreciated without the context of circumstance in which they appeared, we shall furnish a somewhat detailed account of a General Council of the Confederates holden at Onondaga, in January 1690. The object of it was to take order upon a message sent them from the Count de Frontenac, Governor of Canada, the purport of which will appear in the proceedings. It may be premised, that the Onondaga counterpression of the counterpression of t

* History of the Five Nations

cil-house was commonly preferred on these occasions, on account of the central position occupied by that tribe in regard to the other four.* The English authorities at Albany were formally invited to attend; but they contented themselves with sending their public Interpreter, to take note of what passed, together with three Indians instructed in their name to dissuade the Five Nations from entertaining thoughts of peace, or even consenting to a cessation of arms.

The Council opened on the 22d of the month, eighty sachems being present. In the first place SADEKAN-ATIE, an Onondaga, rising in his place, addressed himself to one of the English messengers from Albany. He informed him, that four deputies were present from the Canadian Governor, viz.: three Indians who had formerly been carried prisoners to France, and a sachem of the Praying Indians in the French interest who lived near Montreal; and that Governor Frontenac had notified them of his appointment, and of his having brought over with him from France TAWERAHET and twelve other Indians formerly carried prisoners to that country. Then taking in his hand the wampum-belt sent by the Count, and holding it by the middle, he added:—

"What I have said relates only to one half of the belt. The other half is to let us know that he intends to kindle his fire again at Cadaraqui next spring. He therefore invites his children, and the Onondaga Captain Decanesora, in particular, to treat there with him about the old chain."

ADARAHTA was Chief Sachem of the Praying Indians, a community principally made up of mem bers of several tribes, including the Five Nationa who had been induced by the French to settle them selves upon their territory, and were serviceable t them in various capacities. "I advise you," said Ada rahta, holding three belts in his hand, "to meet th Governor of Canada as he desires. Agree to this if yo would live." He then gave a belt of wampum. "Taw erahet," he proceeded, "sends you this other belt, t inform you of the miseries which he and the rest c his countrymen have suffered in captivity; and t advise you to hearken to Yonondio, if you desire t live. This third belt is from Thurensera, Ohguess and Ertel,* who say by it to their brethren: 'We hav interceded for you with your order, and therefore ad vise you to meet him at Cadaraqui in the spring. I will be well for you."

*It is impossible to say how much influence this circumstance might have on the ambition of the Onondaga orators. It will be observed, that the tribe enjoyed rather more than its equal share of rhetorical distinction.

† The practice of confirming stipulations and making proposals by belts, so commonly adopted among the Indians, cannot be understood in any way better than by observing the various instances mentioned in the text.

A Mohawk chief, one of those instructed by the Albany magistrates to represent their wishes at the council, now delivered the message they had given him. He had treasured it up word for word. The Interpreter, who had the same message in writing followed him while he spoke, and found him correct.

to a syllable.

Cannehoot, a Seneca sachem, next proceeded to give the Council a particular account of a treaty madduring the summer previous, between his own trib and some Wagunha messengers, one of the Canadi an nations, on the river Uttawas. The latter had act ed on the behalf of seven other tribes; and he wishes the other four members of his own Confederacy to ratify what had been done by the Senecas. The articles proposed by the Wagunhas were as follows:

1. "We are come to join two bodies into one,"-de livering up at the same time two prisoners.

2. "We are come to learn wisdom of the Senecas

*Indian names—meaning Day-Dawn, Partridge, and Rose, given to Frenchmen well known to the Five Nations. The policy of sending such messages is sufficient ly obvious.

and of the other Five Nations, and of your brethren of New-York;"-giving a belt.

3. "We by this belt wipe away the tears from the eyes of your friends, whose relations have been killed in the war. We likewise wipe the paint from your soldier's faces";"—giving a second belt.

4. "We throw aside the axe which Yonondio put into our hands by this third belt."

5 "Let the sun, as long as he shall endure, always shine upon us in friendship;"—giving a red marble sun, as large as a plate.

6. "Let the rain of heaven wash away all hatred, hat we may again smoke together in peace;"—givng a large pipe of red marble.

7. "Yonondio is drunk—we wash our hands clean from his actions;"-giving a fourth belt.

8. "Now we are clean washed by the water of neaven; neither of us must defile ourselves by hearkming to Yonondio."

9. "We have twelve of your nation prisoners; they shall be brought home in the spring;"—giving a belt to confirm the promise.

10. "We will bring your prisoners home when the strawberries shall be in blossom, at which time we intend to visit Corlear, [the Governor of New-York] and see the place where the wampum is made."

When Cannehoot had done, the Wagunha presents were hung up in the council-house, in sight of the whole assembly. They were afterwards distributed mong the several Five-Nations, and their acceptance was a ratification of the treaty. A large belt was also even to the Albany messengers, as their share. A wampum belt sent from Albany, was in the same nanner hung up, and afterwards divided. The New-Book, sent the wooden model of a fish, as a token of their adhering to the general covenant. This was handed round among the sachems, and then laid aside to be preserved.

The Indians universally paint their faces on going war, to make their appearance more terrific to the enumy. To wipe off the paint, was to make peace.

At the end of these ceremonies, Sadekanatie rose again. "Brothers!" he said, "we must stick to our brother Quider, and regard Yonondio as our enemy; he is a cheat." By Quider he meant Peter, referring to Peter Schuyler, Mayor of Albany; a gentleman much esteemed by the five tribes, but whose name, having no labials in their language, they were unable to pronounce.

After some farther proceedings, the English Interpreter was desired to deliver his message from Albany. He told them that a new Governor had arrived in the province, with a large number of fresh troops; that England was at war with France; and that the people of New-England were fitting out an expedition against Canada. He advised them not to treat with the French, but at all events only at Albany. That people, he said, would keep no agreement made anywhere else.

The sachems now held a consultation together for some time, the result of which, was thus declared by a speaker chosen for the purpose, and who is supposed to have been Sadekanatie. The different passages were addressed respectively to the deputies of the parties referred to.

"Brothers! Our fire burns at Albany. We will not send Decanesora to Cadaraqui. We adhere to our old chain with Corlear—We will prosecute the war with Yonondio—We will follow your advice in drawing off our men from Cadaraqui. Brothers! We are glad to hear the news you tell us—but tell us no lies!"

"Brother Kinshon! We hear you design to send soldiers to the eastward against the Indians there.* But we advise you, now so many are united against the French, to fall immediately on them. Strike at the root; when the trunk shall be cut down, the branches will fall of course."

* New-Hampshire and Maine tribes, at war with the Colonies, and known to be instigated and assisted by the French.

"Corlear and Kinshon,—Courage! Courage! In the spring to Quebec! Take that place—You will have your feet on the necks of the French, and all their friends in America."

Another consultation terminated in the adoption of the following answer to be sent to the Canadians.

1. "Yonondio! You have notified your return to us, and that you have brought back thirteen of our people who were carried to France—We are glad of it. You desire us to meet you at Cadaraqui next spring, to treat of the old chain. But, Yonondio! how can we trust you, who have acted deceitfully so often? Witness what was done at Cadaraqui—the usage our messengers met with at Uttawas, and what was done to the Senecas at the same place." Here a belt was given, indicating a willingness still to treat.

2. "Thurensera, Oghuesse and Ertel! Have you observed friendship with us? If you have not, how came you to advise us to renew friendship with Yonondio?" A belt also was attached to this answer.

3. "Tawerahet! The whole Council is glad to hear of your return with the other twelve. Yonondio!—You must send home Tawerahet and the others this present winter—before spring. We will save all the French we have prisoners till that time."

4. Yonondio!—You desire to speak with us at Cadaraqui;—Don't you know that your fire there is extinguished? It is extinguished with blood. You must send home the prisoners in the first place."

5. "We let you know that we have made peace with the Wagunhas."

6. "You are not to think that we have laid down the axe, because we return an answer. We intend no such thing. Our Far-fighters shall continue the war till our countrymen return.

7. "When our brother Tawerahet is returned, then we will speak to you of peace."

Such was the result of the great exertions made a this time by the Canadian Government to overaw the Five Nations, and to draw them away from the English alliance. The whole proceeding, though in deed it furnishes no extraordinary specimens of the eloquence, illustrates in the plainest manner the very favorable circumstances under which their orator came forward, and the inducements they had to de vote their genius to the council-house, even in preference to war.

Sadekanatie, who acted a prominent part in the Onondaga Council, and was himself of that tribe appeared to great advantage upon several other occa The favorite orator of the Confederates, how ever, during most of the period in which he flour ished, was Decanesora, whose name has already been mentioned. That Sachem was for many year almost invariably employed as the Speaker in their negotiations with both French and English. He was one of the deputies who fell into the hands of Adario and we have seen that in the message of Count Fron tenac to the Onondaga Council, he invited "his chil dren, and Decanesora, the Onondaga Captain, in partic ular," to treat with him at Cadaragui. The Confeder ates, on the other hand, signify their disposition to con tinue the war by saving," we will not send Decane sora."

Mr. Colden, who knew this orator well, and heard him speak frequently, gives him credit for a perfect fluency, and for "a graceful elocution that would have pleased in any part of the world." He was tall, and his person well made; and his features are said to have borne a resemblance to the busts of Cicero. I is much to be regretted in his case, as in many others, that but very slight indications of his eloquence are preserved to these times. Such as are preserved probably do him very imperfect justice. Some of them, however, at least indicate the sagacity, the courtesy, the undaunted courage, and the highminded sense of honor, which, among the countrymen of Decan

s among those of Quintillian, were no less nendations of the orator than they were virtues man.

e winter of 1693-4, after a long series of hosbetween the Confederates and the French,—aton both sides with alternate suffering and intil both were heartily weary of the war,—cerful proposals, artfully set forth by Jesuit mes-, were at length so well received by all the Cones excepting the Mohawks, that a council was ned at Onondaga to act upon them. The 1 were civilly invited to attend; and although ley and the Mohawks neglected to do so, no es were adopted in council, except with the anding that they should not be final without irst submitted to the examination of both those

With this view, several sachems were sent ny, and of these Decanesora was the principal speaker. The account which he gave to Mauyler and the Albany magistrates of the negonow pending, including its origin, is a fine en, as Mr. Colden observes, of his art, not only othing over an affair undertaken against the interest and advice, but also in introducing orcing his own views of the sovereign dignity Five Nations.

ther Cayenguirago,"* he began, "we are come aint you, that our children, the Oneidas, having selves sent a messenger to Canada, he has t back with him a belt of peace from the Gov-

soon as Tariha [the messenger] arrived at Canwas asked, where the six hundred men were, re to attack Canada, as they had been informed Indian appellation, signifying a swift arrow, givovernor Fletcher in consequence of the prompt he had once rendered the Five Nations, in an icy occasioned by a French invasion. Schuyler. seed as representing the Governor.

by Cariokese, a Mohawk Deserter? He assured them there was no such design."

"He was carried to Quebec, where he delivered his belt, with the following proposition. 'Yonondio, if you would have peace go to Albany, and ask it there, for the Five Nations will do nothing without Cavenguirago.' The Governor of Canada was angry at this, and said, he had nothing to do with the Governor of New York; he would treat only with the Five Nations; the peace between the Christians must be made on the other side the great lake. He added, he was sorry to see the Five Nations so far degenerated as to take a sixth nation into their chain, to rule over them. 'If you had desired me to come and treat in any of your castles, I would have done it; but to tell me I must go to Albany, is to desire of me what I can by no means do. You have done very ill, to suffer the people of New York to govern you so far, that you dare do nothing without their consent. I advise you to send two of each nation to me, and let Decanesora be one of them. I have orders from the King my master to grant you peace, if you come in your proper persons to ask it.' The Governor of Canada afterwards said.

"'Children of the Five Nations, I have compassion for your little children, therefore come speedily and speak of peace to me, otherwise I'll stop my ears for the future: by all means let Decanesora come; for if the Mohawks come alone, I will not hear them; some of all the Five Nations must come. Now, Tariha, return home, and tell the Five Nations, that I will wait for their coming till the trees bud, and the bark can be parted from the trees. I design for France in the spring, and I leave a gentleman to command here, to whom I have given orders to raise soldiers, if you do not come in that time. And then what will become of you? I am truly grieved to see the Five Nations so debauched and deceived by Cavenguirago, who is the chief men of the Five Nations used to converse with me; but this Governor of New York has so deluded you, that you hearken to none but him; but take care of what will follow, if you hearken to none but him."

* Colden.

Here the orator took occasion to explain, very shrewdly, why the deputation to which he belonged had been delayed so long, with some other matters of the same kind. He then reported the following resolutions agreed upon by the Council to be sent to the Governor of Canada. They were probably his own composition, the Council having been called, and the whole transaction in a great measure managed by himself.

1. "Yonondio!—You have sent for me often, and as often asked, why I am afraid to come? The great kettle of war that you have hung over the fire is the reason of it." Here Decanesora said he was to lay down a belt, and ask the Governor's consent to the other two which he held in his hand.

2. "We now not only throw down the kettle, and thereby throw the boiling water out of it, but likewise break it to pieces, that it may never be hung up again,-by this second belt."

3. "Hearken Yonondio!—You are sent from the French King, your master. So is Cayenguirago from the Great King and Queen of England. What I am now about to speak to you, is by inspiration from the Great Spirit. You say that you will have nothing to do with our brethren of Cayenguirago. But I must will you, that we are inseparable. We can have no peace with you so long as you are at war with them;"—which, added Decanesora, is to be confirmed by the third belt.

The noble fidelity to engagements here set forth a a sacred principle, was far from being the result of either fear or mere affection; and this Schuyler himself had the opportunity of testing, before the deputer tation left Albany.

7. "The Governor of Canada's words, and the Resolutions of the Five-Nations," said the orator in conclusion, " are now before you. Consult, therefore. what is to be done. If it be necessary for the Brethren to go to our castle, to advise us farther, be not unwilling." Here he laid down a large belt, eleven rows deep, and seven fathoms of wampum. This signified an amicable disposition; but when, on the ensuing day, Major Schuyler replied that he would consent to no treaty with the French, and proposed that the deputation, and Decanesora in particular, should visit him again at the end of seventy days, the rejoinder was after consultation, that they would visit him. as for myself," said the old Sachem, "I cannot dispose of myself without their directions. If they order me, I shall willingly return. We did not expect to hear such positive prohibition of keeping any correspondence with the French. If any mischief happen within the seventy days, let us not blame one another. Consider again what is most for the public good—and let it be spoken before we part."

This was confirmed with a large belt of fourteen deep. Major Schuyler afterwards asked, a second time, whether they would wholly suspend correspondence with the French, for the term last mentioned. "I have no authority," said the orator, "to answer this question. I shall lay the belt down in every one of the castles, and say, that by it all correspondence is desired to stop with the French. I cannot promise that this will be complied with."

The conference did not end here. On the sixth-day, Schuyler called the deputation together, for the purpose of making a new and vigorous effort. How much influence his assertions or arguments, alone, might have had, cannot be determined, for a fortunate incident occurred which materially altered the aspect of affairs, being just in season to enable him to carry his point for the time. The stipulation attached to Decanesora's final consent does him high honor. "You have at last shut up the way to Canada," he out we have one thing to ask, after mature deon, which we expect will not be refused us." ijor observed, that every thing should be granch he thought essential to the character or the of the nation. He then proceeded to request, English messenger might be permitted to acy one to be sent by himself to the Praying in Canada. The objects were first, to inform idians of what he had ascertained to be the tracter of the Jesuit who had been among the tions; secondly, to notify them of the meetpinted at Albany, and of the consequent inathe deputies to visit them at the same time, peen proposed; and thirdly, to agree upon a ed cessation of arms until they might be able them. Decanesora further desired, that if r should not send a messenger, he would at all out these propositions in writing, as a token of it to them.

all, events took place, owing in no small dewe shall find, to the English themselves, etermined the chieftains to visit the Canadian or in the spring. Some explanation of these furnished by the following speech of Sade-

He, with his fellow deputies, visited Govertcher at Albany, in May, (1694,) and in the f the conference which ensued, delivered his its in the following manly and forcible style: ther Cayenguirago!—Some of our sachems ast winter, that we should keep no corresponith the French. We confess we have broken mise. We have received a messenger from

We have sent our deputies to Canada in Decanesora being one.] The belt is not yet by which we are to acknowledge our fault in er. The reason of our doing it is truly this, a fraid of the enemy."

en a messenger came last year from Canada daga, our brother Cayenguirago discharged ting in General Council at Onondaga, to comsult on that message, and ordered us to hold our Gen eral Council here at Albany on that affair. The privilege of meeting in General Council when we please, is a privilege we always have enjoyed; no former Governor, of the name of Corlear, ever obstructed this privilege. We planted a tree of peace in this place with them. Its roots and branches extend as far as Virginia and New-England, and we have reposed with pleasure under its shade. Brother, let us keep to that first tree, and let us be united and unanimous; such prohibition of our assemblies will be of ill consequence, and occasion differences between us.

"We acknowledge, I say, our sending agents to Canada for peace. We were encouraged in doing this by the knowledge we have of the Governor of Canada. He is an old man, and was formerly Governor of that place. He was always esteemed a wise peaceable man, and therefore we trust our message will have a good issue. We did not take it amiss that you sent to the Dewagunhas, nor that Arnout was sent to the Satanas, both of them our enemies; and, for the same reason, our brother Cayenguirago ought not to be displeased with our sending to the French for peace.

"We, Onondagas, acknowledge ourselves to have been the chief promoters of this Message. We have sent in all nine sachems with nine belts. It is true we are now under much uneasiness in having trusted so many sachems in the French hands, being almost half the number we have in our nation, but we were in haste to prevent the designs the French had against our countries and yours, by the great warlike prepare tions they were making in Canada."*

He concluded with specifying the instructions their deputies had received, and presented a belt in confirmation of all he had said. Colonel Fletcher replied, that he would not discuss any other subject until he was satisfied what reason there was for chargings.

* Colden.

m with having forbidden the Council, and made ace with the Indian tribes, as alleged by the ora-This appears to have been a mistake; and acrdingly, on the ensuing day, it was frankly acknowlged to be such, and that in terms which left no ocsion to doubt the speaker's sincerity. "We assure ou," he said, " we will never separate from you. We il have one head, one blood, one soul, one heart ith vou." This was said in reference to the alleged chibition of the Council. "As to the Dewagunis and Shawanons," added the speaker, " we are conlent Cayenguirago will not admit them into his govnment, till they have made peace with us. e shall willingly grant. When our enemies are ambled, and beg peace, why should they not have Let them come and live with us. It will strengthen ur country."* He then proceeded thus:-

"Brother Cavenguirago!-When the Christians est arrived in this country, we received them kindly. Then they were but a small people, we entered into league with them, to guard them from all enemies hatsoever. We were so fond of their society, that we ed the great canoe which brought them, not with a ope made of bark to a tree, but with a strong iron chain extende to a great mountain. Now, before the Chrisans arrived, the General Council of the Five Naions was held at Onondaga, where there has been, from the beginning, a continual fire kept burning; it made of two great logs, whose flame never extinishes. As soon as the hatchet-makers [their general me for Christians, arrived, the General Council at Condaga planted this tree at Albany, whose roots ad branches have since spread as far as New-England, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Maryland and ginia; and under the shade of this tree all these lish colonies have frequently been sheltered."

*A Roman principle, recognised in the practice well theory of the Five Nations. Colden says, they encourage the people of other nations [including wives] to incorporate with them?" Thus, for examily, the Sixth Nation was added to the Confederacy in Inc.

Here the orator gave seven fathoms of wam to renew the chain; and promised, as he declared expectation of receiving, mutual assistance in ca an attack from any enemy.

"The only reason, to be plain with you," he tinued, "of our sending to make peace with French, is the low condition to which we are redu while none of our neighbors send us the least a ance, so that the whole burthen of the war lies alone. Our brethren of New-England, Connec Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, of their accord thrust their arms into our chain; but sinc war began we have received no assistance from t We, alone, cannot continue the war against the Fre by reason of the recruits they daily receive from other side the great lake.

"Brother Cayenguirago!—Speak from your It Are you resolved to prosecute the war vigora against the French; and are your neighbors of Virg Maryland, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New-land, resolved to assist us? If it be so, notwithstan any treaty hitherto entered into, we will prosecut war as hotly as ever. But if our neighbors will assist, we must make peace, and we submit it to consideration, by giving this great belt fifteen de-

"Brother Cayenguirago!—I have truly told yor reasons which have induced us to offer peace to French; we shall likewise, from the bottom of hearts, inform you of the design we have in this ty. When the Governor of Canada shall have cepted the nine belts, of which I have just now you, then we shall have something more to say by large belts, which lie still hid in our bosom. shall lay down first one and say, 'we have a brown cayenguirago, with whose people we have been ted in one chain from the beginning. They mus included in this treaty; we cannot see them invo ody war, while we sit in easy peace.' If the nor of Canada answer, that he has made a septence with us, and that he cannot make any with Cayenguirago, because the war is from he great lake; then we shall lay down the secteat broad belt, and tell the Governor of Canif you will not include Cayenguirago's people, aty will become thereby void, as if it had nevn made;' and if he persists, we will absolutely him."

ile the conference was going on at Albany, Dera and his fellow deputies arrived at the castle of aying Indians, near the falls above Montreal. they were conducted, by the Superior of the s, to Quebec. They had their audience of the nor of Canada with great solemnity, in the ice of all the ecclesiastics and officers of disn. and of the most considerable Indians then Every day, while they remained, they entertained at the Governor's table, or at those principal citizens. On the other side, it is said veteran Decanesora, that shrewdly accommodais coat to his company, he made himself still personable than usual, by the aid of a splendid rement which might have done credit to a modnbassador. He was clothed in scarlet, trimwith gold; and his reverend locks were covered laced beaver-hat, which had been given him lonel Fletcher a few months before. Neither ony nor decoration, however, nor even good a. mitigated the old orator's firmness.

ather!"*—he said to the Governor, after meng the objects of the deputation,—"If we do not ide a peace now, it will be your fault. We have y taken the hatchet out of the River Indians term used in mere courtesy, and because the Govchose to call the Indians his children.' So a Saexplained it to one of the New York Governors, "signified nothing."

[Hudson's river] whom we incited to the war. But we must tell you, that you are a bad man. You are inconstant. You are not to be trusted. We have had war together a long time. Still, though you occasioned the war, we never hated the house of Oghuesse [the Montreal gentleman.] Let him undertake the toilsome journey to Onondaga. If he will come, he shall be welcome.

"Father!"-he continued,-" We are now speaking of peace, and therefore I must speak a word to the Praying Indians, and first to those of Cahnawaga [chiefly Mohawks.] You know our customs and manners. Therefore make Yonondio acquainted with them .- Assist in the good work of peace. As for you," addressing a party of praying Indians most of whom had once been Onondagas,) "you are worse than the French themselves. You deserted from us, and sided with our enemies to destroy us. Make some amends now by forwarding peace." He then resumed his address to the Governor.

"You have almost eaten us up. Our best men are killed in this bloody war. But we forget what is past. Before this we once threw the hatchet into the river of Kaihohage,* but you fished it up, and treacherously surprised our people at Cadaraqui. After that you sent to us to have our prisoners restored. Then the hatchet was thrown up to the sky, but you kept a string fastened to the helve, and pulled it down, and fell upon our people again. This we revenged to some purpose, by the destruction of your people and houses in the island of Montreal.

"Now we are come to cover the blood from our sight, which has been shed by both sides during this long war.

"Yonondio!-We have been at war a long time. We now give you a medicine to drive away all ill thoughts from your heart, to purge it and make it clean, and restore it to its former state.

* Near Oswego, on Lake Ontario, where the treaty

"Yonondio!-We will not permit any settlement at Cadaraqui. You have had your fire there thrice extinguished. We will not consent to your building that fort: but the passage through the river shall be free and clear. We make the sun clean, and drive away all clouds and darkness, that we may see the light without interruption.

Juu

"Yonondio!-We have taken many prisoners from one another, during the war. The prisoners we took have been delivered, according to our custom, to the families that have lost any in the war. They no longer belong to the public. They may give them back if they please. Your people may do the same. We have brought back two prisoners, and restore them to you."#

In the course of his reply to this speech, the Governor observed, that he should not make peace with Cavenguirago. But Decanesora, nobly and fearlessly true to every engagement as to his own honor, promptly declared that he never would agree to a peace for the Confederates, except on condition of a truce for the English. "All the country," said he, "will look upon e: meas a traitor; I can treat with you no longer." And undoubtedly, anxious as he was to effect the object of his embassy, he would have returned home disap-71 pointed, had not the Governor, after a discussion of three days, finally yielded, by agreeing to undertake no enterprise against New York during the summer. Another difficulty arose upon the Governor's insisting and on having hostages left with him, which the Sachem would not consent to. The matter was adjustor ed by the voluntary proposal of two Indians in his by company to remain.

After the return of the Deputation to the country of the Five Nations, a conference was held at Albany between a new deputation on their part, and the Governor of New-York. The latter, well knowing how much the neighboring colonies were interested in the result of the French negotiation, invited several of them to send representatives, which they accordingly did. Among those present were the Governor of New-Jersey, and five commissioners from Massachusetts and Connecticut. On the other hand, Decanesora and Sadekanatie both attended in the name of the Five Nations. The former gave an exact account of every thing which passed at Quebec. The latter,who seems rather to have coveted opportunities of declaring the freest sentiments in the freest manner, which his colleague indeed never declined,—opened the conference with a long speech upon the history of the English and Indian intercourse; how the league had begun, and had been enlarged and strengthened; and finally,-what was the chief aim of his argument, -how other colonies, as he said, had thrust their arms into the chain, but had given little or no assistance against the common enemy. There was some cause for this complaint, and the orator was resolved that he would not be misunderstood when he stated it. "Our brother Cavenguirago's arms;" he continued, "and our own are stiff, and tired with holding fast the chain. Our neighbors sit still and smoke at their ease. The fat is melted from our flesh, and fallen on them. They grow fat while we grow lean."

* Colden.

"This chain made us the enemy of the French. If all had held as fast as Cayenguirago, it would have been a terror to them. If we would all heartily join, and take the hatchet in hand, our enemy would soon be destroyed. We should forever after live in peace and ease. Do but your parts, [probably addressing the Commissioners] and thunder itself cannot break the chain."

Thus closely did the orators, who were in other words the statesmen of the Five Nations, investigate the conduct alike of their enemies and their allies, and thus freely and fearlessly did they in all cases express themselves as they felt. Characters of every nd machinations, political and personal, were it to bear upon them on all sides. The French ry plied them at one turn, and the English pedhe next; and they talked and traded with eiboth, as the case might be, with the same indonperturbable gravity. Each party went away, s, chuckling over the ease with which he had all upon savage simplicity, and flattering himat their opinion of his honesty was at least adeto his own opinion of his shrewdness. But the proved otherwise.

anesora once said to Major Schuyler, in reply latter's suggestion of fraud on the part of a messenger of the French,—"We know that the avors his own nation. But it is not in his powher our affection to our brethren. We wish ould bury all the misunderstandings you have ved on his account,—and we likewise wish you as credit to the RUM-CARRIERS than you do." is a palpable hit, truly, and a deserved one. us, generally, were the Barbarian Orators. After in the safe side. Nothing daunted their is deceived their sagacity.

CHAPTER V.

Account of the Ottawas—Their first Chief-Sack known to the English, Pontlac—His interview w Major Rogers—Protects that officer and his troop Saves Detroit from an army of Indians—Hostility of northern tribes to the English, after the conquest Canada—Adventures of HERM—Anecodtes of Mivavana—Supposed feelings of Pontlac towards English—His great project of combination.

Having arrived regularly, according to the or observed in this work, at the commencement of eighteenth century, we shall now turn our attento a section of the continent hitherto mostly unnumber of the continent hitherto mostly unnumber of, but which at that period began to be the the of important events, and to be illustrated by at I one character comparable to any in the whole opass of Indian annals. We refer to the vicinity the Northern Lakes, to the numerous and powe tribes resident in that region, and particularly to P

It has been stated by respectable authority, that celebrated individual was a member of the tribe Sacs, or Saukies; but there appears to us no suffic reason for disputing the almost universal opin which makes him an Ottawa. That tribe, when commerce of the early French colonists of Can first began to extend itself to the Upper Lakes, found in their vicinity, in connection with others, the Chippewas and the Pottawatamies. three are supposed to have been originally a scior the Algonquin stock,—that being the general m of the nation, which, in Champlain's time, was set along the north banks of the St. Lawrence, betw Quebec and Lake St. Peters. According to t own traditions, preserved to this day, the three tr (as they afterwards became,) in their flight or emi

. went together from the East, as far as Lake Hu-A separation afterwards took place, the reof which was that the Ottawas, being most ined to agriculture, remained near what has since Michilimackinac, while their companions preed venturing to still more distant regions of the th and West.

etroit was founded by the French in July, 1701, from that time the Ottawas began to give frequent ifestations of a spirit which finally made them. ectively, an ally or an enemy of the first impore to the different civilized parties with whom they l intercourse. Only three years after the French ed in their vicinity, several of their chiefs e induced to visit the English at Albany. ost inevitable consequence of the interview was, they returned home with a firm persuasion that French intended to subdue them. They attempto fire the town, therefore, in one instance; and ut the same time, a war-party, on their return from ccessful expedition against the Iroquois,—whom were bold enough to attack in their own coun--paraded in front of the Detroit fortress, and ofd battle. After some hard fighting, they were deed and driven off.

lut the French have always effected more among Indians in peace than in war, and thus it was with Ottawas; for, from the date of the skirmish just ationed, they were almost uniformly among the t friends and even protectors of the colony. hen the French arrived at these falls," said a Chipra Chief at a Council held but a few years since, ey came and kissed us. They called us children, we found them fathers. We lived like brethren he same lodge," &c.* Such was the impression made also upon the Ottawas; and we accordingly find them, in conjunction with the Chippewas, aiding the French on all occasions, until the latter surrendered the jurisdiction of the Canadas to the English. Several hundred of their warriors distinguished themselves at the disastrous defeat of Braddock.

See a Discourse delivered before the Michigan Hiscal Society, in 1830, by Mr. Schoolcraft. We also nowledge our obligations, in preparing our notice of itiac, to Governor Cass's Discourse of the year preus, before the same body.

Pontiac was probably at the head of this force. Several years before, he was known as a warrior of high standing and great success; and as early as 1746, he commanded a powerful body of Indians, mostly Ottawas, who gallantly defended the people of Detroit against the formidable attack of a number of combined Northern tribes. But a far more important trial, both of his principles and his talents, was yet to come, in the transfer of power from the French to the English, which took place at the termination of the long war between those nations, ending with the peace of 1761. The stations upon the Lakes were given up in 1760. The first detachment of British troops which ever penetrated into that region, was sent, during this year, for the purpose of taking formal possession. That force was commanded by Major Rogers and from the "Concise Account of North America," written by him,* we obtain our knowledge of the earliest interview between Pontiac and the English. It is allowed to have the merit of authenticity; and although not so definite as might be desired, it furnishes a variety of characteristic and singular facts.

Major Rogers says, that 'on the way,'—meaning generally the route from Montreal to Detroit,—he was met by an embassy from Pontiac, consisting of some of his own warriors, together with several chief, belonging to subordinate tribes. The object was to inform him that Pontiac, in person, proposed to whim; that he was then not far distant, coming peasifile; and that he desired the Major to halt his the techment, 'till such time as he could see him with his ewn eyes.' The Deputies were also directed to represent their master as the King and Lord of the country which the English had now entered.

* Published in London: 1765. We have a * Jess of the same expedition, from the same pen.

The Major drew up his troops as requested, and before long the Ottawa Chieftain made his appearmce. He wore, we are told, an air of majesty and princely grandeur. After the first salutation, he sternw demanded of the Englishman his business in his territory, and how he had dared to venture upon it without his permission. Rogers was too prudent and to intelligent to take offence at this style of reception. Nor did he undertake to argue any question of actual or abstract right. He said that he had no design exminst the Indians, but, on the contrary, wished to move from their country a nation who had been an watacle to mutual friendship and commerce between them and the English. He also made known his mmission to this effect, and concluded with a preset of several belts of wampum. Pontiac received tem with the single observation,—"I shall stand in be path you are walking till morning,"—and gave, at he same time, a small string of wampum. This, writes the Major, was as much as to say, 'I must not merch farther without his leave.'

Such, undoubtedly, was the safest construction; and the sequel shows that Pontiac considered it the most civil. On departing for the night, he asked Rogers whether he wanted any thing which his country afforded; if so, his warriors should bring it for him. The reply was discreet as the offer was generous.—that whatever provisions might be brought in. should be well paid for. Probably they were; but the English were at all events supplied, the next morning. with several bags of parched corn and other necessaries. Pontiac himself, at the second meeting, offered the pipe of peace, and he and the English officer moked it by turns. He declared that he thereby made peace with the Englishman and his troops; and that they should pass through his dominions, not only unmolested by his subjects, but protected by them from all other parties who might incline to be hostile.

11.—Ğ

These were no idle promises. Pontiac remained in company with his new friend constantly after the first interview, until he arrived at Detroit. He employed one hundred of his warriors to protect and assist a corps of soldiers, in driving a large number of fat cattle which had been sent on for the use of the troops, from Pittsburgh, by the way of Presqu'Isle. He also despatched messengers to the several Indian towns on the south side and west end of Lake Erie, to inform them that Rogers had his consent to march through the country. Under such auspices, the Major might reasonably have felt himself safe, after reaching his destination. But the chieftain understood his situation better than himself. He kept near him so long as he remained at Detroit; and Rogers acknowledges that he was once at least 'the means of preserving the detachment' from the fury of a body of Indians, who had assembled with sinister purposes at the mouth of the Strait.

This incident leads us to remark, that almost all the tribes on the Northern waters who had associated and traded with the French during the term of their jurisdiction,—and but few of them there were who had not,—sincerely lamented the change which had occurred in public affairs. They were very generally prejudiced against the new comers, as they were attached to the old residents. Perhaps the latter, individually, if not otherwise, fomented the spirit of discontent. But, however this might be, there were reasons enough in the ancient relations maintained between the French and the Indians, independently of argument or comment, why such a spirit should manifest itself under the circumstances we have mentioned.

The fact itself is indisputable. It is proved by facts, subsequent and consequent. It is also proved by many respectable authorities, only one of which will be here referred to, for the sake of illustration.

r. Henry, the well known author of "Travels Adventures in Canada and the Indian Teres, between the years 1760 and 1766," speaks n affair in point, which happened at the island of La Cloche,* in Lake Huron, on his ge, in the spring of 1761, from Montreal to illimackinac. He found a large village of Ins at this place, who treated him in the kindest ner, until 'discovering that he was an Englishman,' told his men that the Michilimackinac Ins would certainly kill him, and that they might fore as well anticipate their own share of the re. On this principle they demanded a part of tores, and he deemed it prudent to make no reice. He observes, afterwards, that his mind was ressed' with the repeated warnings he received ire destruction where he was going. Again, hostility of the Indians was exclusively against English;" and this circumstance suggested to Henprospect of security in assuming a Canadian diswhich fortunately enabled him to complete his dition. it the difficulty did not cease here. He was now e neighborhood of Pontiac, and among the tribes ct to his influence. What manner of men they , and how far the master-spirit may be supposed we filled them with the fire of his own soul, will ar from a speech of one of the Chippewa Chiefs, IVAVANA, who, with a band of his own tribe, visthe newly arrived trader at his house in Michilitinac. The courage and the eloquence of this blended as they are with the highest degree of the chivalry, almost make us suspect his identity the Ottowa Chieftain himself. The name is by leans conclusive against such a conjecture, for it d be an extraordinary fact in Indian History, if so distinguished a man as Pontiac were known only by one appellation, and especially when he associated with a large number of tribes, speaking as many different languages.

to named by the French, from a rock on the island, h, being struck, rings like a bell.

Henry describes his hero as a person of remarkable appearance, of commanding stature, and with a singularly fine countenance. He entered the room where the traveller was anxiously awaiting the result of his visit, followed by sixty warriors, dressed and decorated in the most formal and imposing fashion of war. Not a word was spoken as they came in, one by one, seated themselves on the floor at a signal from the Chief, and began composedly smoking their pipes. Minavavana, meanwhile, looking steadfastly at Henry,

Minavavana, meanwhile, looking steadfastly at Henry, made various enquiries of his head-boatman, a Canadian. He then coolly observed, that "the English were brave men, and not afraid of death, since they dared to come thus fearlessly among their enemies." A solemn pause now ensued for some time, until the Indians having finished their pipes, the Chieftain took a few wampum-strings in his hand, and commenced the following harangue:

"Englishman!—It is to you that I speak, and I demand your attention!

"Englishman!—You know that the French King is our father. He promised to be such; and we, in return, promised to be his children. This promise we have kept.

"Englishman!—It is you that have made war with this our father. You are his enemy; and how then could you have the boldness to venture among us, his children? You know that his enemies are ours.

"Englishman!—We are informed that our father, the king of France, is old and infirm; and that being fatigued with making war upon your nation, he is fallen asleep. During his sleep, you have taken advantage of him, and possessed yourselves of Canada. But his nap is almost at an end. I think I hear him already stirring, and inquiring for his children the Infians;—and, when he does awake, what must be some of you? He will destroy you utterly!

"Englishman!—Although you have conquered the French, you have not yet conquered us! We are not your slaves. These lakes, these woods and mounains, were left to us by our ancestors. They are our nheritance, and we will part with them to none. Your nation supposes that we, like the white people, annot live without bread, and pork, and beef! But, you ought to know, that He,—the Great Spirit and Master of Life,—has provided food for us, in these wood lakes, and upon these mountains.

"Englishman!—Our father, the king of France, employed our young men to make war upon your nation. In this warfare, many of them have been killing; and it is our custom to retaliate, until such time to the spirits of the slain are satisfied. Now the spirits of the slain are to be satisfied in either of two ways. The first is by the spilling of the blood of the nation by which they fell; the other, by covering the bodies of the dead, and thus allaying the resentment of their relations. This is done by making presents.

"Englishman!—Your king has never sent us any presents, nor entered into any treaty with us. Wherefore he and we are still at war; and, until he does hese things, we must consider that we have no other father, nor friend, among the white men, than the king of France. But, for you, we have taken into consideration, that you have ventured your life among me, in the expectation that we should not molest you. You do not come armed, with an intention to make war. You come in peace, to trade with us, and supply us with necessaries, of which we are much in want. We shall regard you, therefore, as a brother; and you may sleep tranquilly, without fear of the Chippewas. As a token of our friendship, we present you with this pipe, to smoke."

The interview terminated in a manner which reminds us of Pontiac's meeting with Rogers. Minavana gave the Englishman his hand—his companions followed his example—the pipe went round i due order—and, after being politely entertained, a quietly departed. If this was not the Ottowa him self, he was certainly a kindred spirit; and if the former exercised authority over many such characters,—as he probably did,—it is not difficult to account for the confidence which dictated the design, or for the measure of success which attended the prosecution of one of the mightiest projects ever conceived in the brain of an American savage.

This project was a combination of all the tribes of and about the Northern waters, perhaps partiall with an ultimate view to the restoration of the Frenc Government, but directly and distinctly to the com plete extirpation of the English.

It has been observed by a writer who has done sig nal justice to the genius of Pontiac, "that we are no where told the causes of disaffection which separate him from the British interest." * There is an allusio here to the information furnished by Rogers, who it deed states that Pontiac "often intimated to him the he should be content to reign in his country, in sul ordination to the king of Great Britain, and was wi ling to pay him such annual acknowledgement as he we able, in furs, and to call him his Uncle." But, withou in the least disparaging the honesty of Rogers, we as inclined to dispute the propriety of what we suppose to have been rather his own inference than the Chie tain's declaration. A disregard to niceties of expres sion, on the part of both speaker and hearer, was n uncommon thing at interviews of this kind,—one par ty being always eager, and both frequently ignorate enough, had they even tolerable means of commun cating together in language at all.

The context confirms this opinion. It appears sit gular, at first glance, that Pontiac should propose calling the British king his Uncle. An appellation

* Discourse of Governor Cass.

t Rogers' Account, p. 242: London Edition.

indeed,—as the Iroquois orators told the English at Albany,- signified nothing,' in itself; and yet, as referring to the term Father, applied by Minavavana and the Northern Indians generally, to his Christian Majesty, it did signify, at least, that Pontiac meant to pay a slighter deference to the British king than to the French. No allegiance was acknowledged to ei-As Minavavana said, "the Indians had no Father among the white men"-passing that courtesy for what is was worth—"but the king of France." That, however, did not prevent them from owning and claiming their own woods and mountains. It did not entitle the French king to command the services, instead of 'employing' the assistance of their young men. It did not blind them to the fact, that although the English had conquered the French, they had not conquered them.* It makes the matter still more clear, in regard to what was the understanding of Pontiac, and what ought to have been that of Rogers, that, according to his own statement, the Chieftain "assured him on the same occasion when the language last referred to is said to have been uttered,] that he was inclined to live peaceably with the English. while they used him as he deserved, and to encourage their settling in his country, but intimated that if they treated him with neglect, he should shut up the way, and exclude them from it." In short, concludes the same writer, "his whole conversation sufficiently indicated that he was far from considering himself a conquered Prince, and that he expected to be treated with the respect and honor due to a King or Emperor, by all who came into his country or treated with him." †

7.

八二 二十二

ايد

2

-

3

Ľ

니

٠.

r.

.

. 45.

On the whole, we have seen no evidence, and we know of no reason for presuming, that he was ever any farther attached to 'the British interest,' or rather any otherwise affected towards the idea of becoming stached, than is indicated by the very independent declaration made as above stated. In regard to the question why he never did become attached to the British interest,—taking that for the correct representation of the fact,—history is silent, as unfortunately it is in regard to most of the remarkable occurrences on the frontiers which accompanied and followed his enterprise. The conjectures of any one man, who has intelligently investigated and reflected upon such history as there is, may be worth as much as those of any other. It seems to be probable, however, that although hostilities might have been prevented by a system of good management on the part of the English, (in which their predecessors could have given them a lesson,) they did not arise from any particular acts of aggression.

* Speech of Minavavana. † Rogers' Account, p. 242.

Pontiac reasoned as well as felt. He reasoned as Philip had done before him, and as Tecumseh will be found to have done since. He had begun to apprehend danger from this new government and people; danger to his own dominion and to the Indian interest at large; danger from their superiority in arms, their ambition, their eagerness in possessing themselves of every inilitary position on the Northern waters :-- and we may add also, their want of that ostensible cordiality towards the Indians, personally, to which the latter had been so much accustomed and attached in the golden days of the French, and which they were apt to regard as a necessary indication of good faith as of good will. In the language of the Chippewa orator, the French had lived in the same & lodge with them. They had sent them missionaries; and invited them to councils, and made them presents, and talked and traded with them, and manifested an interest in their affairs,*-always suspected by the Indians less, and yet always effecting their own purposes better and farther, than any other people.

The English, on the other hand, if they committed no aggressions,—(the expedition of Rogers was perhaps considered one; but that Pontiac forgave,)—yet

* Discourse of Schoolcraft.

ested but a slight disposition for national courtefor individual intercourse, or for a beneficial nerce of any description. In other words, they ected '—to use Pontiac's phrase,—all those cirances which made the neighborhood of the ch agreeable, and which might have made their at least tolerable. The conduct of the latter gave rise to suspicion. Theirs never gave rest us, we suppose, the case might present itself to ind of the Ottawa Chieftain. And while such ne apparent disposition, or indifference to any dison in particular, of the English towards the In--and such the consequent liability, if not the table prospect on the part of the latter, if the forhould occupy Canada,—Pontiac was not likely get that they had conquered the French. so that they were rapidly and firmly establisheir new dominion, by movements which, at all s, did not purport to promote the interest of the And he knew, no doubt,—certainly he soon ained,—that whereas the French of Canada and plonies of New-England had hitherto, by their upon each other, left the third party in a good ire disengaged,—the new comers were themfrom Old England, if not New;—speaking the language (and that a strange one to the natives;) at to the same government; and ready at all to be very conveniently supplied and supported, indefinite extent, by those powerful Southern nies which had long before destroyed or driven e Indians from their own borders.

Pontiac reasoned; and he looked into futurity ough to foresee that ultimate fatal result to his which now was the only time, if indeed there yet time, to prevent. Immediate occasions of ity there might be besides; but these must be beject of mere speculation. Affections which do honor, predisposed him to believe that the Englad done injustice to his old friends the French; and the French might further endeavor to perhim that they had also done injustice to himself.

was certain, 'they had treated him with neglect.'
therefore, following his own principle, as well impulse of pride, he resolved to 'shut up the How far he succeeded, and by what means, 'our next subjects of consideration.

CHAPTER VI.

's plan of campaign—He commences active preions—Council of the Ottawas—Grand Council of orthern tribes—Dream of the Delaware—Maxims nugated by Pontiac—Estimate of the number orce of his allies—Commencement of the war isal of nine English posts—Mode of surprisal ce adopted at Michilimackinac, and result—Reno of Detroit undertaken by Pontiac in person iterview with the commandant—His plan discovand the surprise prevented—Letter from Detroit.

plan of operations adopted by Pontiac, for efthe extinction of the English power, evinextraordinary genius, as well as a courage ergy of the highest order. This was a sudden ntemporaneous attack upon all the British 1 the Lakes—at St. Joseph, Ouiatenon, Green 1ichilimackinac, Detroit, the Maumee, and dusky-and also upon the forts at Niagara, Isle, Le Bœuf, Verango and Pittsburg. Most ortifications at these places were slight, being ommercial depôts, than military establishments. ainst the Indians they were strong-holds; and itions had been so judiciously selected by the , that to this day they command the great avecommunication to the world of woods and in the remote north and west. It was maniontiac, familiar as he was with the geography vast tract of country, and with the practical, echnical maxims of war, that the possession lestruction of these posts,-saying nothing of rrisons,—would be emphatically 'shutting up v.' If the surprise could be simultaneous, every English banner which waved upon a thousands of miles should be prostrated at ne moment, the garrisons would be unable to exchange assistance, while, on the other hand, the failure of one Indian detachment would have no effect to discourage another. Certainly, some might succeed. Probably, the war might begin and be terminated with the same single blow; and then Pontiac would again be the Lord and King of the broad land of his ancestors.

The measures taken in pursuance of these calculations, were worthy of the magnificent scheme. The chieftain felt confident that success would multiply friends and allies to his cause. But he knew equally well, that friends and allies to his cause were as necessary to obtain success. Some preliminary principles must be set forth, to show what his cause was; and however plausible it might appear in theory, exertions must also be made to give assurance of its feasibility in practice. A belligerent combination of some kind must be formed in the outset; and the more extensive, the better.

Pontiac commenced operations with his own tribe; the Ottawas being, for several reasons, peculiarly under his control, at the same time that their influence over other tribes was hardly inferior to his own influence over themselves. Some of these tribes had fought with them against the English, not many years before; and the connection between them was so apparent in the time of Major Rogers, that he considered them as "formed into a sort of empire." He expressly states, also, that the Emperor, as he supposed Pontiac then to be, was "elected from the eldest tribe-which is the Ottawawas, some of whom inhabit near our fort at Detroit, but are mostly further westward, towards the Mississippi." He might well add, that Pontiac "had the largest empire and greatest authority of any Indian chief that has appeared on the continent since our acquaintance with it."* The truth probably was, that the tribes here described as confederates, were most of them to each other by descent, more or less remoteme were intimately associated. All would be isposed to act together in any great project, as eady had done, (and as most of them have uring the American Revolution, and during war with Great Britain.) Still such was and nature of Indian government, that it was ry for Pontiac to obtain the separate concurnd confidence of each. To gain over the Ottast, was not to strengthen his authority, indeed, as adding much to his influence. Ottawas, then, were called together, and the is disclosed, explained and enforced, with all juence and cunning which Pontiac could his task. He appealed to the fears, the he ambition, the cupidity of his hearersgard for the common interest of the race. tred of the English, and their gratitude and the French. We are told by a modern hishat some of the Ottawas had been disgraced s.* Such a suggestion, whether well foundot, might probably be made, and would of have its effect. So would the display of a ich the chieftain exhibited and which he proo have received from the King of France, im to drive the British from the country, and the paths for the return of the French. topics having been skilfully managed, and awas warmly engaged in the cause, a grand of the neighbouring tribes was convened at r Aux Ecorces. Here Pontiac again exerted nts with distinguished effect. With a promowledge of the Indian character, and espeware of the great power of superstition upon nds, he related, among other things, a dream, h the Great Spirit, (the orator said,) had seisclosed to a Delaware Indian the conduct his red children to pursue.

* Roger's account, p. 240.

ected

*Discourse of Governor Cass.

nute instructions had been graciously given, suitable to the existing crisis in their fortunes, and remarkably coincident, it will be observed, with the principles and projects of the chieftain bimself. They were to abstain from the use of ardent spirits. They were also to abandon the use of all English manufactures, and to resume their bows and arrows, and the skins of the animals for clothing. It is needless to eulogize the sagacity which dictated both these proposals: "and why," the orator concluded, "why, said the Great Spirit indignantly to the Delaware,—do you suffer these dogs in red clothing to enter your country, and take the land I have given you? Drive them from it!—Drive them!—When you are in distress I will help you!"*

It is not difficult to imagine the effect which this artful appeal to prejudice and passion might have on the inflamable temperaments of a multitude of credulous and excited savages. The name of Pontiac alone was a host; but the Great Spirit was for them,—it was impossible to fail. A plan of campaign was concerted on the spot, and belts and speeches were sent to secure the co-operation of the Indians along the whole line of the frontier.

Neither the precise number nor power of those who actually joined the combination can now be determined. The Ottawas, the Chippewas, and the Pottawatamies were among the most active. The two former of these had sent six hundred warriors in one body to the defence of Fort Du Quesne. The Ottawas of L'Arbre Croche, alone, mustered two nundred and fifty fighting men. The Miamies were engaged.† So were the Sacs, the Ottagamies (or Foxes,) the Menominies, the Wyandots, the Mississagas, the Shawanees; and, what was still more to the purpose, a large number of the Pennsylvania and Ohio Delawares, and of the Six Nations of New York. The alliance of the two last-named parties,—in itself the result of a master-piece of policy, was necessary to complete that vast system of attack which comprelanded all the British positions from Niagara to Green

* Discourse of Governor Cass. + Ibid.

Boy and the Potomac.

The plan was at length thoroughly matured. The work of extirpation commenced on or about the same by, from north to south, and from east to west. The officer were captured. Some of the British forts were captured. Some of the garrisons were completely surprised, and massacred on the spot; a few individuals, in other cases, ecaped. The officer who commanded at Presqu'les, defended himself two days, during which time, the savages are said to have fired his block-house about fifty times, but the soldiers extinguished the sames as often. It was then undermined, and a train was laid for an explosion, when a capitulation was proposed and agreed upon, under which a part of the garrison was carried captive to the north-west. The officer was afterwards given up at Detroit.

A great number of English traders were taken, in their way, from all quarters of the country, to the different forts; and their goods, as well those of the residents at such places, and the stores at the depots themselves, of course became prize to the conquerters. Pittsburgh, with the smaller forts, Ligonier, Bedford, and others in that neighbourhood, were closely beset, but successfully defended, until the arrival of large reinforcements. The savages made amends for these failures by a series of the most horrible devastations in detail, particularly in New York, Pennsylvania, and even in Northern Virginia, which have ever been committed upon the continent.

In case of most, if not all of the nine surprisals first mentioned, quite as much was effected by stratagem as by force, and that apparently by a preconcerted system which indicates the far-seeing superintendence of Pontiac himself. Generally, the commanders were secured in the first instance, by parties admitted within the forts under the pretence of business or friendship. At Maurnee, or the Miamics, (as the station among that tribe was commonly designated,) the officer was betrayed by a squaw, who by piteous entreaties persuaded him to go out with her some two hundred yards, to the succor, as she said, of a wounded man who was dying; the Indians waylaid and shot him.

A more subtle policy was adopted at Michilimackinac, and surer means were taken to effect it. That fort, standing on the south side of the strait, between Lakes Huron and Michigan, was one of the most important positions on the frontier. It was the place of deposit, and the point of departure, between the upper and lower countries; the traders always assembling there, on their voyages to and from Montreal. Connected with it, was an area of two acres, enclosed with cedar-wood pickets, and extending on one side so near to the water's edge, that a western wind always drove the waves against the foot of the stockade. There were about thirty houses within the limits. inhabited by about the same number of families. The only ordnance on the bastions were two small brass pieces. The garrison numbered between ninety and one hundred.

The capture of this indispensable station was entrusted to the Chippewas, assisted by the Sacs, and those two tribes in concert adopted the following plan. The King's birth-day having arrived, a game of baggatiway was proposed by the Indians. This is played with a bat and ball; the former being about four feet long, curved, and terminating in a sort of racket. Two posts are placed in the ground, at the distance of half a mile or a mile from each other. Each party has its post, and the game consists in throwing up to the adversary's post the ball which at the beginning is placed in the middle of the course.

The policy of this expedient for surprising the garrison will clearly appear, when it is understood, that the game is necessarily attended with much violence and noise; that, in the ardor of contest the ball, if it cannot be thrown to the goal desired, is struck in any direction by which it can be diverted from that desired by the adversary; that, at such a moment, nothing could be less likely to excite premature alarm among the spectators of the amusement, than that the ball should be tossed over the pickets of the fort; or that having fallen there, it should be instantly followed by all engaged in the game, struggling and shouting, in the unrestrained pursuit of a rude athletic exercise.

Such was precisely the artifice employed; and to be still more sure of success, the Indians had persuaded as many as they could of the garrison and setters, to come voluntarily without the pickets, for the purpose of witnessing the game, which was said to be played for a high wager. Not fewer than four hundred were engaged on both sides, and consequently, possession of the fort being once gained, the situation of the English must be desperate indeed. The particulars of the sequel of this horrid transaction, furnished by Henry, are too interesting to be wholly emitted

The match commenced with great animation, without the fort. Henry, however, did not go to witness it, being engaged in writing letters to his Montreal friends, by a canoe which was just upon the eve of departure. He had been thus occupied something like half an hour, when he suddenly beard a loud Indian war-cry, and a noise of general confusion. Going instantly to his window, he saw a crowd of Indians within the fort, furiously cutting down and scalping every Englishman they found; and he could plainly witness the last struggles of some of his particular acquaintances.

He had, in the room where he was, a fowling-piece leaded with swan-shot. This he immediately seized, and held it for a few minutes, expecting to hear the fast-drum heat to arms. In this dreadful interval, he as we several of his countrymen fall; and more than the struggling between the knees of the savages, who,

K 2

. fr.

£

•

holding them or this manner, scarped them while ! alive. At length, disappointed in the hope of see 90 any resistance made on the part of the garries. sensible of course, that no effort of his sungle arrives avail against tour hundred Indians, he turned his contion to his own safety. nadian villagers looking out composedly upon seeme of blood settler opposing the Indiana molestert by them he concentrat a hope of find

He immediately climbed over the low fence, we security in one of their houses. was the only separation between the yarthing his house, and that of his next neighbours, house Langinge. He entered he house of the min 'mirately, and found he wrote lamily excusiorrible spectacie Denne hem be suite ett o f. Langinde, and begget mat lan us nim in some place of safety and the he offine should be over in an of dist night preserve him from the second Langtade ooked or a moment spoke and then turned uguin as one his shoulders, and municipal infling or am the semi holding them in this manner, scalped them while yet alive. At length, disappointed in the hope of seeing any resistance made on the part of the garrison, and sensible, of course, that no effort of his single arm could avail against four hundred Indians, he turned his attention to his own safety. Seeing several of the Canadian villagers looking out composedly upon the scene of blood—neither opposing the Indians nor molested by them—he conceived a hope of finding security in one of their houses.

HATHE WAS THEN PERCENT TO THE PERS -N noon a Pint wiman, walling most in him is thillaw time. how which the opening and letting him that it less no most 20 and concession new directionary metre deser eners of mi

He immediately climbed over a low fence, which was the only separation between the yard-door of his house, and that of his next neighbour, Monsieur Langlade. He entered the house of the latter precipitately, and found the whole family gazing at the horrible spectacle before them. He addressed himself to M. Langlade, and begged that he would put him in some place of safety, until the heat of the affair should be over—an act of charity which might preserve him from the general massacre. Langlade looked for a moment at him while he spoke, and then turned again to the window, shrugging his shoulders, and intimating that he could do nothing for him—" Que voudriez-vous que Jen ferrais?"

Henry was now ready to despair; but at this moment, a Pani woman,* a slave of M. Langlade, beckoned to him to follow her. She guided him to a door, which she opened, desiring him to enter, and telling him that it led to the garret, where he must go and conceal himself. He joyfully obeyed her directions; and she, having followed him up to the garret-door, locked it after him, and with great presence of mind took away the key. Scarcely yet lodged in this shelter, such as it was, Henry felt an eager anxiety to know what was passing without. His desire was more than satisfied by his finding an aperture in the loose board walls of the house, which orded him a full view of the area of the fort. For he beheld with horror, in shapes the foulest d most terrible, the ferocious triumphs of the rages. The dead were scalped and mangled; the ing were writhing and shrieking under the unsatised knife and the reeking tomahawk; and from a bodies of some, ripped open, their butchers were inking the blood scooped up in the hollow of joined nds, and quaffed amid shouts of rage and victory. a few minutes, which to Henry seemed scarcely e, every victim who could be found being deoyed, there was a general cry of, "all is finished"—d at this moment Henry heard some of the savasenter Langlade's house. He trembled and grew nt with fear.

* Said to belong to an Indian nation of the South—no doubt the same now generally called Pawnees.

As the flooring of his room and the ceiling of the om beneath consisted only of a layer of boards, he ticed every thing that passed; and he heard the Inms inquire, at their entrance, whether there was y Englishman about. M. Langlade replied, that Ie could not say—he did not know of any"—as fact he did not-" they could search for themselves added) and would soon be satisfied." The state Henry's mind may be imagined, when, immedily upon this reply, the Indians were brought to garret door. Luckily some delay was occasioned through the management of the Pani womanrhaps by the absence of the key. Henry had sufient presence of mind to improve these few moents in looking for a hiding place. This he found the corner of the garret, among a heap of such ch bark vessels as are used in making maple-sur: and he had not completely concealed himself, ien the door opened, and four Indians entered, all ned with tomahawks, and all besmeared with blood m head to foot.

The die appeared to be cast. Henry could scarcebreathe, and he thought that the throbbing of his art occasioned a noise loud enough to betray him. ie Indians walked about the garret in every direcn; and one of them approached him so closely that, at a particular moment, had he put forth hi hand, he must have touched him. Favored, however, by the dark colour of his clothes, and the want clight in a room which had no window, he still remained unseen. The Indians took several turn about the room—entertaining M. Langlade all the while with a minute account of the proceedings of the day—and at last returned down stairs.

Such is the traveller's account of the fall of Mich ilimackinac. The fate of Detroit remains to be told a more important position than even Michilimackinac An immense quantity of valuable goods,—one accoun says, to the amount of five hundred thousand pounds,—was known to be there stored. What was of mor moment, its capture would release the French hhabitants of the Strait from their temporary allegiane to the English, and would consequently unite the hitherto separate lines of operation pursued by the Indian tribes above and below. Under these cir cumstances, its reduction was in person undertaked by Pontiac.

The town is supposed at this period to have been enclosed by a single row of pickets, forming nearly four sides of a square; there being block-houses a the corners and over the gates. An open space in tervened between the houses and the pickets, which formed a place of arms and encircled the village The fortifications did not extend to the river, but t gate opened in the direction of the stream, and no far from it, where, at the date in question, two armed vessels, fortunately for the inhabitants, happened to lie at anchor. The ordnance of the fort consisted o two six-pounders, one three-pounder, and three mor tars; all of an indifferent quality. The garrison numbered one hundred and thirty, including officers besides whom there were in the village something like forty individuals who were habitually engaged in the fur-trade. The inadequate proportion of this force even to the size of the place, may be inferred from the fact, that the stockade which formed its periphe was more than one thousand feet long.

Such was the situation of Detroit, when the Ottawa chieftain, having completed his arrangements, on the 8th of May presented himself at the gates of the town, with a force of about three hundred Indians, chiefly Ottawas and Chippewas, and requested a council with Major Gladwyn, the Commandant. expected, under this pretext, to gain admission for himself and a considerable number of attendants, who accordingly were provided with rifles, sawed off so short as to be concealed under their blankets. At a given signal,—which was to be the presentation of a wampum-belt in a particular manner by Pontiac to the Commandant, during the conference,—the armed Indians were to massacre all the officers; and then. opening the gates, to admit a much larger body of warriors, who should be waiting without, for the completion of the slaughter and the destruction of the fort.

Fortunately, Major Gladwyn obtained a knowledge of the scheme, before an opportunity occurred for its execution. One of the French residents in the vicinity, returning home on the morning of the day last mentioned, is said to have met Pontiac and his party upon Bloody Bridge. This place, which still retains its name, is between one and two miles from the village. The last warrior in the file, being a particular friend of the white man, threw aside his blanket, and significantly exhibited the shortened rifle beneath. Whether his disclosure was communicated to Major Gladwyn, cannot be determined.

Carver states,—and his account is substantially confirmed by tradition, as well as by other authorities,—that an Indian woman betrayed the secret. She had been employed by the Commandant to make him a pair of mocassins out of elk-skin; and having completed them, she brought them into the fort, on the trening of the day when Pontiac made his appearance, and his application for a council. The Major was pleased with them, directed her to convert the raidue of the skin into articles of the same description, and having made a generous payment, dismissed her. She went to the outer door, but there stopped, and for some time loitered about as if her errand was still unperformed. A servant asked her what she wanted, but she made no answer.—The Major himself observed her, and ordered her to be called in, when, after some hesitation, she replied to his enquiries, that as he had always treated her kindly, she did not like to take away the elk-skin, which he valued so highly;—she could never bring it back. The Commanant's curiosity was of course excited, and he pressed the examination, until the woman at length disclosed every thing which had come to her knowledge.

Her information was not received with implicit credulity, but the Major thought it prudent to employ the night in taking active measures for defence. His arms and ammunition were examined and arranged; and the traders and their dependants, as well as the garrison, were directed to be ready for instant service. A guard kept watch on the ramparts during the night, it being apprehended that the Indians might anticipate the preparations now known to have been made for the next day. Nothing, however, was heard after dark, except the sound of singing and dancing, in the Indian camp, which they always indulge in upon the eve of any great enterprise. The particulars of the council of the next day, we shall furnish on the authority of a writer already cited.

In the morning, Pontiac and his warriors sang their war-song, danced their war-dance, and repaired to the fort. They were admitted without hesitation, and were conducted to the council house, where Major Gladwyn and his officers were prepared to receive them. They perceived at the gate, and as they passed through the streets, an unusual activity and movement among the troops. The garrison was under arms, the guards were doubled, and the officers were armed with swords and pistols. Pontiac enquired of the British commander, what was the cause of this unusual appearance. He was answered, that it was proper to keep the young men to their duty, lest they should become idle and ignorant. The business of the council then commenced, and Pontiac proceeded to address Major Gladwyn. His speech was bold and menacing, and his manner and gesticulations vehement, and they became still more so, as he approach- . ed the critical moment. When he was upon the point of presenting the belt to Major Gladwin, and all was breathless expectation, the drums at the door of the council house, suddenly rolled the charge, the guards levelled their pieces, and the British officers drew their swords from their scabbards. Pontiac was a brave man, constitutionally and habitually. He had fought in many a battle, and often led his warriors to victory. But this unexpected and decisive proof, that his treachery was discovered and prevented, entirely disconcerted him. Tradition says he trembled. all events, he delivered his belt in the usual manner, and thus failed to give his party the concerted signal of attack. Major Gladwyn immediately approached the chief, and drawing aside his blanket. discovered the shortened rifle, and then, after stating his knowledge of the plan, and reproaching him for his treachery, ordered him from the fort. The Indians immediately retired, and as soon as they had passed the gate, they gave the yell, and fired upon the gar-They then proceeded to the commons, where rison. was lying an aged English woman with her two sons. These they murdered, and afterwards repaired to Hog Island, where a discharged serjeant resided with his family, who were all but one immediately massacred. Thus was the war commenced.*

As to leading facts, this account is without doubt correct. Perhaps it is in all the minutes. We have however seen a somewhat different version, which, as the affair is one of great interest, we shall here annex without comment. It was originally furnished in a letter from a gentleman residing in Detroit at the time of the attack, addressed to a friend in New-York, and dated July 9, 1763. It may be seen in the most respectable papers of that period, and is believed to be unquestionably authentic. As to many circumstances the writer's statement agrees with that just given, although the conference (perhaps another one) is said to have taken place on the 7th of the month. The sequel is thus:

* Discourse of Gov. Cass.

At the close of the interview, the Indians returned disconcerted, and encamped on the farther side of the river. Pontiac was reproached by some of the young warriors for not having given the signal (the appearance of the garrison having surprised him.) He told them, that he did not suppose they were willing to lose any of their men, as they must have done in that case; if they were, he would still give them an opportunity, whether the garrison should be under arms or not. All were satisfied with this proposition—"in consequence of which,"-proceeds our informant,-" Pondiac, with some others of the chiefs, came the next day, being Sunday, to smoak the Pipe of Peace with the Major, who despised them so much in consequence of their treachery, that he would not go nigh them: but told Captain Campbell* if he had a mind he might speak with them. The Captain went, and smoaked with them, when Pondiac told him he would come the next day and hold a conference with the Major, and to wipe away all cause of suspicion he would bring all his old and young men, to take him by the hand in a friendly manner."

This certainly looks much like a genuine Indian artifice. The writer then says, that "after repeating several pieces of such stuff, he withdrew with his gang to his camp." The next morning, (Monday, the 9th.) as many as sixty-four canoes were discovered, all of them full of Indians, crossing the river above the fort. A few of them came to the gates and demanded per-aission for the whole company to be admitted, for a ouncil.' The Commandant refused this request, but xpressed his willingness that some forty or fifty hould come in, that being quite as many as was usul in such cases The messengers returned to their comrades, who were lying and standing all around he fort, at the distance of two hundred yards. A consultation now took place, and then, we are told, they all got up and fled off yelping like so many Devls.—They instantly fell upon Mrs. Turnbell (an Engish woman to whom Major Gladwyn had given a mall Plantation, about a Mile from the Fort, and murlered and scalped her and her two sons; from thence hey went to Hogs Island, about a league up the River from the Fort, and there murdered James Fisher and his wife, also four Soldiers who were with them, and parried off his Children and Servant Maid prisoners; the same evening, being the 9th, had an account, by Frenchman, of the defeat of Sir Robert Davers and Capt. Robertson." The sequel of the war, and of the history of Pontiac, will form the subject of our next chapter.

*The immediate predecessor of Gladwyn in the command of the post.

II.—I

CHAPTER VII.

Siege of Detroit maintained by Pontiac—The C dant meditates a retreat—The French propos ference with Pontiac, which takes place—T demands the surrender of the fort, which t mandant refuses—Vigorous renewal of hos Advantages gained by the Indian army—A succor to the English—Battle of Bloody I Pontiac at length raises the siege,—Causer The Indians make peace—His subsequent car his death—Anecdotes illustrating his influency, magnanimity, integrity and genius—His a as chieftain—His talents as an orator—His tary fame.

We have now to furnish the details of on most singular transactions which has ever guished the multifarious warfare of the red n the whites—the protracted siege of a forti lized garrison by an army of savages. We still avail ourselves of the diary contained in ters already cited, and of other information t same source.

"The 10th, in the Morning, (Tuesday) they ed the Fort very resolutely. There continued hot Fire on both Sides until the Evening, we ceased firing, having had several killed and we They posted themselves behind the Garden and Houses in the Suburbs, and some Barns a houses that were on the Side of the Fort in Woods, to which we immediately set Fire by Spikes &c. from the Cannon." In this mann by occasional sorties, the enemy was disloded driven back, until they could only annoy the approaching the summit of the low ridge which looked the pickets, and there, at intervals, the tinued their fire.

. .

- .

-

These were to the effect, that the troops should it mediately surrender, "lay down their arms, as the fathers, the French, had been obliged to do—lea the cannon, magazines, and merchants' goods, at the two vessels—and be escorted in batteaux by I dians to Niagara." The Major promptly made a swer, that "his commanding officer had not sent h there to deliver up the fort to Indians or any bo else, and he would therefore defend it so long a single man could stand at his side."

Hostilities now recommenced, and were so vigously sustained on the part of Pontiac, that for so months, (says the diary,) "the whole Garrison, Ocers, Soldiers, Merchants and Servants, were up the Ramparts every Night, not one having slept in House, except the sick and wounded in the Hospite

Three weeks after the commencement of 1 siege,—on the 30th of May,—the English sentinel duty announced, that a fleet of boats, supposed contain a supply of provisions and a reinforcement troops from Niagara, was coming round 'the point,' a place called the Huron Church. The garris flocked to the bastions, and for a moment at least he shone upon every countenance. But presently death-cry of the Indians was heard, and the fate the detachment was at once known. Their approx having been ascertained, Pontiac had stationed a be of warriors at Point Pelée. Twenty small battea manned by a considerable number of troops, a laden with stores, landed there in the evening. Indians watched their movements, and fell upon th about day-light. One officer, with thirty men, escal across the lake; but the others were either killed captured; and the line of barges ascended the ri near the opposite shore, escorted by the Indians the banks and guarded by detachments in each be in full view of the garrison and of the whole Free settlement.

The prisoners were compelled to navigate boats. As the first batteaux arrived opposite to four British soldiers determined to effect iberation, or to perish in the attempt. They ly changed the course of the boat, and by loud lade known their intention to the crew of the

The Indians in the other boats, and the esthe bank, fired upon the fugitives, but they on driven from their positions by a cannonade the armed schooner. The guard on board this aped overboard, and one them dragged a solth him into the water, where both were drownhe others escaped to the shore, and the boat d the vessel, with but one soldier wounded.
the other prisoners might escape, they were imely landed, and marched up the shore, to the point of Hog Island, where they crossed the nd were immediately put to death, with all the e accompaniments of savage cruelty.

ing the month of June, an attempt to relieve urrison proved more successful. A vessel had been sent to Niagara, arrived at the mouth river, with about fifty troops on board, and a of stores. The Indians generally left the and repaired to Fighting Island, for the purpose ercepting her. They annoyed the English nuch in their canoes, till the latter reached the f the Island, where, on account of the wind fail-ey were compelled to anchor.

captain had concealed his men in the hold, the Indians were not aware of the strength of ew. Soon after dark, they embarked in their, and proceeded to board the vessel. The men itently ordered up, and took their stations at the liently ordered up, and took their stations at the liently ordered up, and took their stations at the sel, when the captain, by the stroke of a hampon the mast, which had been previously congave the signal for action. An immediate distook place, and the Indians precipitately fled, any killed and wounded. The next morning, sel dropped down to the mouth of the river, she remained six days, waiting for a wind. On the thirteenth, she succeeded in ascending the river, and reaching the fort in safety.

Pontiac felt the necessity of destroying these vessels, and he therefore constructed rafts for that pur-The barns of some of the inhabitants were demolished, and the materials employed in this work. Pitch and other combustibles were added, and the whole so formed, as to burn with rapidity and intensity. They were of considerable length, and were towed to a proper position, above the vessels, when fire was applied, and they were left to the stream, in the expectation that they would be carried into contact with the vessels, and immediately set fire to them. Twice the attempt was made, without success. The British were aware of the design, and took their measures accordingly. Boats were constructed, and anchored with chains above the vessels, and every precaution was used to ward off the blow. The blazing rafts passed harmlessly by, and other incidents soon occurred to engage the attention of the Indians.*

A week subsequent to this date, we find various letters from Detroit published in Atlantic papers, of which the following passages are extracts. They will furnish the reader with an idea of the true situation of the garrison at this time, much better than could be derived from any description of our own.

"Detroit, July 6, 1763.

Ţ

ā

)

,

÷

3

We have been besieged here two Months, by Six Hundred Indians. We have been upon the Watch Night and Day, from the Commanding Officer to the lowest Soldier, from the 8th of May, and have not had our Cloaths off, nor slept all Night since it began; and shall continue so till we have a Reinforcement up. We then hope soon to give a good Account of the Savages. Their Camp lies about a Mile and a half from the Fort; and that's the nearest they choose to come now. For the first two or three Days we were attack-three or four Hundred of them, but we gave so warm a Reception that they don't care for g to see us, tho' they now and then get behind so or Garden, and fire at us about three or four ed Yards' distance. The Day before Yesterday, led a Chief and three others, and wounded nore; yesterday went up with our Sloop, and d their Cabins in such a Manner that they are keep farther off."

* Discourse of Gov. Cass.

next letter is under date of the 9th.

u have long ago heard of our pleasant Situabut the Storm is blown over. Was it not very ble to hear every Day, of their cutting, carving, and eating our Companions? To see every ad Bodies floating down the River, mangled and red. But Britons, you know, never shrink; ways appeared gay, to spite the Rascals. They and eat Sir Robert Devers; and we are inl by Mr. Pauly, who escaped the other Day ne of the Stations surprised at the breaking out War, and commanded by himself, that he had Indian have the Skin of Captain Robertson's or a Tobacco-Pouch!"

ree Days ago, a Party of us went to demolish a work they had made. We finished our Work, re returning Home; but the Fort espying a Pardians coming up, as if they intended to fight, re ordered back, made our Dispositions, and adbriskly. Our Front was fired upon warmly, turned the Fire for about five Minutes. In the time, Captain Hopkins, with about twenty Men, ff to the left, and about twenty French volunteers ff to the Right, and got between them and their

The Villains immediately fled, and we returnwas prudent, for a Centry whom I had placed, ed me he saw a Body of them coming down he Woods, and our Party being but about eighty, ot able to cope with their united bands. In we beat them handsomely, and yet did not Hurt to them, for they ran extremely well. We only killed their Leader, and wounded three others. One of them fired at me at the Distance of fifteen or twenty Paces, but I suppose my terrible Visage made him tremble. I think I shot him."

This 'leader' was, according to some accounts, an Ottawa Chief; according to others, the son of a Chief. At all events, he was a popular if not an important man; and his death was severely revenged by one of his relatives, in the massacre of Captain Campbell. That gentleman had been detained a prisoner ever since the proposal of a capitulation, together with his friend McDougall. The latter escaped a day or two before the skirmish; but his unfortunate comrade was tomahawked by the infuriated savage. One account says, "they boiled his heart and ate it, and made a pouch of the skin of his arms!" The brutal assassin fled to Saginaw, apprehensive of the vengeance of Pontiac; and it is but justice to the memory of that Chieftain to say, that he was indignant at the atrocious act, and used every possible exertion to apprehend the murderer.

The reinforcement mentioned above as expected. arrived on the 26th of July. It was a detachment of three hundred regular troops. Arrangements were made the same evening, for an attack on the Indian camp. But by some unknown means, Pontiac obtained information of the design; and he not only removed the women and children from his camp, but seasonably stationed two strong parties in ambuscades, where they were protected by pickets and cord-wood, and concealed by the high grass. Three hundred men left the fort, about an hour before day, and marched rapidly up the bank. They were suffered to reach the bridge over Bloody-Run, and to proceed about half way across it, before the slightest movement indicated that the enemy was aware of their approach. Suddenly a volume of musketry was poured in upon the troops; the commander fell at the first discharge, and they were thrown into instant confusion. A retreat was with some difficulty effected by g the Indians from all their positions at the baypoint, but the English lost seventy men killed,

rtv wounded.

s was the last important event attending the ution of the siege. A modern author observes, ontiac relaxed in his efforts, that the Indians egan to depart for their wintering-grounds, and ie various bands, as they arrived in the spring, red their desire for peace. Such seems to have he case at a much earlier date; for we find it under date of the 18th of August (1763,) that Iurons, who begin to be wearied of the war," ought in and given up eight prisoners. adds, that "the Hurons and Pouteouatamies.

vere partly forced into the war by the menaces Ottawas, begin to withdraw." Pontiac had io confident of success as to have made some rements, it is said, for dividing the conquered ry with the French; and several Indians planted of corn. But his warriors grew weary of the and his army was at this time reduced to about undred.

ere or how he passed the winter, we are not But his movements were still watched with v. and the garrison at Detroit, especially, seem have thought themselves safe from his operafrom day to day. "We have lately been very says a respectable writer, under date of Der 3, 1763,—"in providing Abundance of Wheat, Indian Corn and Pease, from the Country, in we have so far succeeded as not to be in Danbeing starved out." It further appears, that deents of the enemy were still in the neighbor-"The Approach of Major Wilkins' Party had a ood effect; the Enemy moved farther off. 'Tis at Pondiac and his tribe have gone to the Missisbut we don't believe it." Again,-" The Wyanof Sandusky, are much animated against us; have been reinforced lately by many villains all the nations concerned in the war." So late as March 25th, we are told that "about twel ago, several scalping-Parties of the Potev came to the Settlement, &c. We now slee Clothes, expecting an Alarm every Night."

But the reign of terror maintained by th ments of Pontiac was drawing to its clos power of the civilized party was too much fo bination like his. General Bradstreet, with a three thousand men, proceeded to Niagara the summer of 1764, on his way to the no Here a grand council was held, at which ne thousand Indians attended. One account se were representatives present from twenty-two tribes, including eleven of the western,—a f ingly indicating the immense train of or managed by the influence of Pontiac. Man best allies had now deserted the chieftain. eller, Henry, who was under Bradstreet's co mentions that he was himself appointed k ninety six Chippewas of the Sault de Sainte-M other savages, under the name of the India lion ;- "Me," he adds, "whose best hope it lately been, to live through their forbearan ought to be observed, however, in justice to who were thus led against their own cou and kinsmen, that by the time the army reac. Erie, their number was reduced to fourteen l tion.

On the arrival of the army at Detroit, whi reached without opposition, all the tribes in gion came in and concluded a peace, with the tion of the Delawares and Shawanees. But was no more seen. He not only took no pepending negotiation, but abandoned the cour repaired to the Illinois.

We find no authority for the assertion of that henceforward he laid aside his animosit English; and still less, that "to reward this tachment, Government allowed him a handson sion." Even this writer admits that his cont leagth grew suspicious." Rogers, on the other hand, who had good opportunities of knowing the facts, says, that while "some of the Indians left him, and by his consent made a separate peace, he would not be personally concerned in it, saying, that when he made a peace, it should be such a one as would be useful and honorable to himself, and to the King of Great Britain. But he has not as yet proposed his terms."

This account bears manifest marks of correctness. It agrees with many other illustrations of a magnanimity which might have made Pontiac a fit comrade for the Knights of the middle ages. But confirmations of it may be found elsewhere. It was the common belief of the times, that he had gone among the Illinois, with a view of there holding himself in readiness for whatever might happen to the benefit of the great cause for which he was resolved to live and the stand as far as might be advisable. The following passage occurs in an authentic letter from Detroit, dated May 19, 1765.

"PONDIAC is now raising the St. Joseph Indians, the Miamies, the Mascontins, the Ouiattenons, the Pians and the Illinois, to come to this place the beginning of next month, to make what effect they can against us; for which purpose he has procured a large belt for each nation, and one larger than the rest for a They are to be joined by 'hatchet' for the whole. some of the northern Indians, as is reported. This, they say, is to be an undertaking of their own, as they are not to have any assistance from the French. When Pondiac left the Miamies, he told them to remain quiet till he came back; it should then be 'all war, or all peace.' * * I make no doubt of their intention to perform what we have heard of, though I don't think it will come to any head. I am likewise well convinced, if Pondiac be made to believe he would be well received at this place, he would desist from any intention he may have; but it will be impossible to convince him of that, while there are such a number of traitorous villains about him. You can't imagine what most infamous lies they tell," &c.

&quot; Rogers' Account, p. 244.

It appears from this testimony, that Pontiac had a this period re-engaged in his plan of combination. It would also appear, that he was instigated by some of the French; for it is believed that only individuals among them were guilty of the practices alleged Those at Detroit conducted themselves amicably. even during the war; and some of them, we have seen, volunteered to fight against the Indians. where Pontiac now was, there would be the best possible opportunity of exerting a sinister influence over him, there being many Frenchmen among the Illinois, and they not of the most exemplary character in all cases. On the whole, it seems to us probable. that while the last mentioned combination was really 'an undertaking of his own,' it might have been checked at any moment, and perhaps never would have been commenced, had not Pontiac been renewedly and repeatedly prejudiced against the English interest by the artifice of some of the French, and perhaps some of the Indians. However his principles in regard to that subject might remain unchanged, no abstract inducement, we think, would have urged him to his present measures under the circumstances to which he was now reduced. as it may, the principles themselves need not be doubted; nor can we forbear admiring the energy of the man in pursuing the exemplification and vindication of them in practice. His exertions grew only the more daring, as his prospects became more desperate.

But his death at length ended at once his disappointments and hopes, together with the fears of his enemies. This event is supposed to have taken place in 1767. He was assassinated, at a council held among the Illinois, by an Indian of the Peoria tribe. Carver says, that "either commissioned by one of the English Governors, or instigated by the love he bore

**and being convinced from the speech Pontiac made in the council, that he still retained his former prejudices against those for whom he now professed a friendate, he plunged his knife into his heart, as soon as he had done speaking, and laid him dead on the spot."

As to what is here said of professed friendship, the writer evidently alludes to his own previous assertion, which we have shown to be unfounded, and for which we are still unable to perceive the slightest grounds. Still several of these suppositions, though only to be received as such, are probably true. There is little doubt that Pontiac continued firm in his origmal principles and purpose; that he expressed himself without disguise; that he endeavored to influence, and did influence, a large number of his countrymen; and that the Peoria savage, whether a personal enemy or a 'spy'—or what is most probable, both. a spy because an enemy, -- did assassinate him with the expectation, to say the least, of doing an acceptable service to some foreign party, and a lucrative one for himself. We need not assert that he was 'commissioned by an English Governor.' Pontiac was an indefatigable and powerful man, and a dangerous foe to the English. He was in a situation to make enemies among his countrymen, and the English were generally in a situation and disposition to avail themwives of that circumstance.

From the manner of life adopted by the chieftain ubsequent to the treaty at Detroit, it might be infered, perhaps, that he became alienated from the Northern tribes, including his own, who had been his best friends, or that they became alienated from him. We are inclined to believe, on the contrary, that their negotiations took place 'by his consent,' as has been stated heretofore; and that he removed southward, as well with a view to their good (as regarded the friendship of the English,) as at the same time for the purpose of recommencing his own operations upon a new theatre, and with fresh actors. He would thereby gain new influence, while he would lose or none of the old.

11.-K

This supposition is confirmed by the well-aut ticated fact that the Ottawas, the Chippewas, and Pottawatamies—some writers add the Sacs and I es—made common cause in the revenge of his de Following that principle with the customary In latitude of application, they made war upon the The latter associated with themselve ria tribe. defence, the Kaskaskias, the Cahokias, and the nois; but to no purpose. The two latter tribes ar lieved to have been wholly exterminated, and of former only a few families remain. "The mer of the great Ottawa Chief," says a distinguished torian of that section, "is yet held in reverence an his countrymen: and whatever is the fate which await them, his name and deeds will live in their ditionary narratives, increasing in interest as the crease in vears."

The astonishing influence exerted by this rema ble man so long as he lived, may be inferred 1 the period of peace which succeeded his death the punishment of his murderer, still more for than from any circumstances we have noticed. has been seen, that more than twenty tribes, who engaged in his combination, appeared at the agara Council. His movements are believed to been felt as far east as among the Micmacks of N Scotia. As far south as Virginia, they were not perceptible, but formidable in the highest de The agitation produced among the inhabitants part of our Western territory, within a few mor by Black-Hawk and his associates, scarcely i trates the similar excitement which, in 1763, previ over a much larger portion of the continent. A passages from periodical publications of that will give a better conception of the truth.

"New York, June 13th, 176 We hear that on Monday last arrived an Exp Pittsburgh, advising that a Party of Indians had ared Col. Clapham and all his Family."

"Fort Pitt, May 31st.
ere is most melancholy News here. The Inhave broken out in divers Places, and have murCol. C. and his Family. An Indian has brought belt to Tusquerora, who says Detroit was investd St. Dusky cut off. All Levy's goods are stopt Tusquerora by the Indians; and last Night or ten Men were killed at Beaver Creek. We of scalping every Hour. Messrs. Cray and AlliHorses, twenty-five, loaded with Skins, are all

"FORT PITT, June 16th. have destroyed the Upper and Lower Towns, and morrow Night shall be in a good Posture of De-Every Morning, an Hour before Day, the whole on are at their Alarm-posts. Ten Days ago, illed one Patrick Dunn, and a man of Major man's; also two other men. Capt. Callender's a re all killed, and the goods taken. There is count of Mr. Welch, &c. Mr. Crawford is prisoner, and his people all murdered. Our posts, I am afraid, are gone."

"FORT BEDFORD, June 8th.
Tuesday, one Smith was attacked, and by an without arms, at Beaver Creek, who endeavout him under water; but Smith proving too; for him, put the Indian under water, and ht off a piece of his ear, and left him.

* ave a numerous militia who are under arms alcontinually. Regular piquets, town-guards, uards, centinels, &c. are observed."

"ALBANY, June 16th.
u must have heard of the many murders com
l on the English, by different tribes of In dians, at different places, which makes many fear the rupture is or will become general among the southern tribes. We have accounts, &c. * * Lieut. Cuyler, with a party of Green's rangers, consisting of ninety-seven men, set out from Niagara, with provisions for Detroit. On the evening of the 4th, they went on shore to encamp, within fifty miles of Detroit. Cuyler sent his servant to gather greens, and the lad being gone so long, a party was sent for him, who found him scalped. He put his men in the best position for a sudden attack. The Indians fell upon them, and killed and took all but the Lieutenant and thirty of his men, who retreated back to Niagara, leaving near two hundred barrels of provision with the enemy."

"PHILADELPHIA, June 23d.

By an express just now from Fort Pitt, we learn that the Indians are continually about that place; that out of one hundred and twenty traders but two or three escaped," &c. * It is now out of doubt it is a general insurrection among all the Indians."

"WINCHESTER, (Virginia,) June 22d.

Last night I reached this place. I have been at Fort Cumberland several days, but the Indians having killed nine people there, made me think it prudent to remove from those parts, from which I suppose near five hundred families have run away within this week. It was a most melancholy sight to see such numbers of poor people, who had abandoned their settlement in such consternation and hurry, that they had scarcely anything with them but their children."

"CARLISLE, July 3d.

Ligonier was attacked on the 23d, by the Savages, for a day and a night, but they were beat off; this we had from an Indian. We killed one of the Scoundrel's from the Fort, who had trusted himself a little too near." * * *

"PHILADELPHIA, July 27th.

I returned home last night. * * There has been a good deal said in the papers, but not more than is strictly true. Shippersburgh and Carlisle are now become our frontiers, none living at their plantations but such as have their houses stockaded. Upwards of two hundred women and children are now living in Fort Loudoun, a spot not more than one hundred feet softare. I saw a letter from Col. S. late of the Virginia Regiment, to Col. A. wherein he mentions that Great-Brier and Jackson's River are depopulatedunwards of three hundred persons killed or taken prisoners; that for one hundred miles in breadth and three hundred in length, not one family is to be found in their plantations; by which means there are near twenty thousand people left destitute of their habitations. The seven hundred men voted by the assembly, recruit but very slowly, &c."

g!

ĸ,

"Goshen, N. Y. August 5th.

Last week the following accident happened in this place. Several men having been out upon the hills hunting for deer, in their return they met with a flock of partridges, at which four guns were discharged, three of them pretty quick after each other. This, being an uncommon accident in the Place, was mistaken by some of the inhabitants of the Wall-Kill for firing of Indians. Immediately alarm-guns were fired and spread over the whole Place, which produced an amazing panic and confusion among the people, near five hundred families. Some for haste cut the harnesses of their horses from their ploughs and carts, and rode off with what they were most concerned to preserve. Others, who had no vessel to cross the river, plunged through, carrying their wives and children on their backs. Some, we have already heard, proceeded as far as New-England, spreading the alarm as they went, and how far they may go is uncertain."

"BETHLEHEM, (Penn.) Oct. I cannot describe the deplorable condition the country is in. Most of the inhabitants of twom, and other places, are fled from their tions. I cannot ascertain the number killed, but it exceeds twenty. The people at Nazareth, so ther places belonging to the [United] Brethren put themselves in the best posture of defence can; they keep a strong watch every night, and by the blessing of God, if they are attacked, to a stand."

Nothing can be added, to enforce the imp which these various descriptions must make the mind of the reader. They shew that the hension excited by the movements of Pontiac, 1 the Chieftain himself was not yet thoroughly a ated, exceeded every thing of the kind which curred on the continent since the days of King

It is mainly from his actions, of necessity, character of such a man, in such a situation, There are, however, some items of al information respecting him, and these a confirm the opinion we have already express anxiety to learn the English methods of mar ing cloth, iron and some other articles, was he offered Major Rogers a part of his territ would take him to England for that purpose so endeavored to inform himself of the ti discipline of the English troops. Probablconsequence of suggestions made by Roge of the conversations he had with that office which the latter allows that "he discov strength of judgment, and a thirst after kthat afterwards, in the course of the war, ed an Indian Commissary, and began to i credit. These, which are said to have b ally redeemed, are described as having t whatever he wanted in exchange for upon them, with the addition of his owr chape of an otter. The system was set in operation partly for the benefit of the French. They had been subjected, occasionally, to indiscriminate pillage, but Pontiac become satisfied that such a process would soon put an end to itself, besides doing no honor to his cause. The supplies which they subsequently furnished, were regularly levied through the medium of his commissariat department.

The authority Pontiac exercised over the combined tibes, seems to have been little less than that of a complete Dictator. In the Detroit diary, heretofore cited, we are informed that about the commencement of the siege, a Mr. Rutherford "fell into the hands of the savages. One of the garrison afterwards employed a Frenchman to redeem him from his Indian master, and furnished eighty pounds worth of goods for that purpose. The bargain was effected, but the gentleman had been liberated but one day and one night, when Pontiac, whose notice nothing escaped, sent a band of fifty Indians to take him away by force. No nation," he said, "should have liberty to sell their prisoners till the war was over."

As the notice we have given of the fate of Campbell may leave an unfavorable impression in regard to the Chieftain's good faith, it should be observed, that the Indian maxims on the use of artifice in war are universally different from those of most civilized nations. Nor can we expect to know what circumstances might have occurred, subsequent to the visit of Campbell to the Indian camp, which would justify his detention, though contrary to the expectation of all parties. It appears, however, from the Diary, that he was first induced to go out, not by Pontiac, (as we have seen it stated,) but by some of the French, who "told him there was no Risque in going out; they would answer Life for Life, that he should return safe into the Fort."

It is well settled that the detention—whether in pursnance of a scheme of Pontiac, thereby to induce a capitulation, or for other reasons unknown—was by no means intended to result as it unfortunately did. The same writer who states that Pontiac solemnly pledged his word for the Captain's safety, states that the assassin fled to Saginaw, apprehensive of his vengeance; and that he used every exertion to apprehend the murderer, who would no doubt have paid for his temerity with his life.*

No act has ever been ascribed to Pontiac which would lead us to doubt this conclusion. Nothing like sanguinary disposition, or a disposition to tolerate cruelty in others, belonged to his character. have observed his treatment of Rogers, at a time when he had no doubt resolved upon war, and when he already felt himself to have been ill-treated by the English. That gentleman relates an anecdote of him which occurred during the war, still more honorable to the chieftain. As a compliment, Rogers sent him a bottle of brandy, by the hands of a Frenchman. His Councillors advised him not to taste it: it must be poisoned, said they, and sent with a design to kill him. But Pontiac laughed at their suspicions. "He cannot," he replied, "he cannot take my life, I have saved his!"

In 1765, an English officer, Lieutenant Frazer. with a company of soldiers, went among the Illinois. where was a French station, at which Pontiac then was,-probably with a view of observing the chieftain's movements. He considered it an aggression, and called upon the French Commandant to deliver his visitors into his hands. The Officer attempted to pacify him, in vain. "You," [the French,] said he, "were the first cause of my striking the English. This is your tomahawk which I hold in my hand." He then ordered his Indians, whom by this time he had mustered in large numbers from the neighborhood, to seize upon the English at once. The order was generally obeyed, but Frazer escaped. The Indians threatened to massacre all the rest unless he hould be given up, upon which, he gallantly came forward, and surrendered to Pontiac.

* Governor Cass.

The sequel is worthy of notice. "With the interest of Pendiac," say the papers of the day, " he [Frazer] get imself and his men back again." On the arrival of mother Indian chief, with a white woman for a wife. who did all in their power to examperate the savages. hey seized upon the English again. "But Pondiac wdered them to give the men back," and the order was again obeyed. Frazer wished to stay longer, and Pontiac promised to protect him. He however advised him, considering the disposition of the Indiana. to leave the country, and he accordingly went down to river in a batteau, and at length made his way to "He says, Pondiac is a clever fellow, New-Orleans. and had it not been for him, he should never have got way alive."

of the oratory of the Ottawa Chieftain there remain but few and scanty memorials. Like Philip, is has derived his distinction more from actions than words, and that (as also in Philip's case,) without the sit of any very signal renown as a mere warrior. The only speech of his we have met with, was made the occasion of a conference with the French at buroit, held upon the 23d of May, 1763, in the hope if inducing them to join him in the reduction of the latt. The style of delivery cannot now be ascertain-which the reasoning is close and ingenious.

My Brothers!" he said, "I have no doubt but this far is very troublesome to you, and that my warriors, the are continually passing and re-passing through our settlements, frequently kill your cattle, and intereyour property. I am sorry for it, and hope you to not think I am pleased with this conduct of my young men. And as a proof of my friendship, seellect the war you had seventeen years ago, [1746] and the part I took in it. The Northern nations combined together, and came to destroy you. Who defended you? Was it not myself and my young men? The great Chief, Mackinac, [th.

said in Council, that he would carry to his native village the head of your chief warrior, and that he would eat his heart and drink his blood. Did I not then join you, and go to his camp and say to him, if he wished to kill the French, he must pass over my body, and the bodies of my young men? Did I not take hold of the tomahawk with you, and aid you in fighting your battles with Mackinac, and driving him home to his country? Why do you think I would turn my arms against you? Am I not the same French Pontiac, who assisted you seventeen years ago? I am a Frenchman, and I wish to die a Frenchman."

THE PERSON NAMED IN

After throwing a war-belt into the midst of the council, he concluded in the following strain:

"My Brothers! I begin to grow tired of this bad meat, which is upon our lands. I begin to see that this is not your case, for instead of assisting us in our war with the English, you are actually assisting them. I have already told you, and I now tell you again, that when I undertook this war, it was only your interest I sought, and that I knew what I was about. I yet know what I am about. This year they must all perish. The Master of Life so orders it. His will is known to us, and we must do as he says. And you, my brothers, who know him better than we do, wish to oppose his will! Until now, I have avoided urging you upon this subject, in the hope, that if you could not aid, you would not injure us. I did not wish to ask you to fight with us against the English, and I did not believe you would take part with them. You will say you are not with them. I know it, but your conduct amounts to the same thing. You will tell them all we do and say. You carry our counsels and plans to them. Now take your choice. You must be entirely French, like ourselves, or entirely English. If you are French, take this belt for yourselves and your young men, and join us. If you are English, we declare war against you."

The man who had the ability and the intrepidity to express himself in this manner, hardly needed either the graces of rhetoric or the powers of the warrior, to enforce that mighty influence which, among every people and under all circumstances, is attached, as closely as shadow to substance, to the energies of a mighty mind. Those energies he exerted, and that influence he possessed, probably beyond all precedent in the history of his race. Hence it is that his memory is still cherished among the tribes of the north. History itself, instead of adding to his character in their eyes, has only reduced him to his true proportions in our own. Tradition still looks upon him as klooked upon the Hercules of the Greeks.

CHAPTER VIII.

Account of the Delawares—Their ancient great men, including TAMENEND—History during the Revolu tionary War—Two Parties among them—White Eyes, leader of one, and Captain Pips, of the other-Manœuvres, speeches, plots and counter-plots of these men, their parties, and foreigners connected with both—Anecdotes—Death of White-Eyes in 1780—Trib ute of respect paid to his memory.

The most formidable antagonist the Five Nations ever had to contend with, were the Delawares, as the English have named them (from Lord de la War) but generally styled by their Indian neighbors, Wapanachi, and by themselves Lenni Lenape, or the Original People. The tradition is, that they and the Five Nations both emigrated from beyond the Mississippi, and, by uniting their forces, drove off or destroyed the primitive residents of the country on this side. Afterwards, the Delawares divided themselves into three tribes, called the Turtle, the Turkey, and the Wolf or Monsey. Their settlements extended from the Hudson to the Potomac; and their descendants finally became so numerous, that nearly forty tribes honored them with the title of Grand-father, which some of them continue to apply at the present day.

The Delawares were the principal inhabitants of Pennsylvania, when William Penn commenced his labors in that region; and the memory of Mrovos, their Elder Brother, as they called him, is still cherished in the legends of all that remains of the nation. That remnant exists chiefly on the western banks of the Mississippi, to which ancient starting-place they have been gradually approximating, stage by stage, ever since the arrival of the Europeans on the coast. Their principal intermediate settlements have been in Ohio, on the banks of the Muskingum, and other small rivers, whither a great number of the tribe removed about the year 1760.

2

19

The Delawares have never been without their great men, though unfortunately many of them have lived at such periods and such places, as to make it impossible for history to do them justice. It is only within about a century last past, during which they have been rapidly declining in power and diminishing in numbers, that a series of extraordinary events, impelling them into close contact with the whites, as well as with other Indians, has had the effect of bringing forward their extraordinary men.

Among the ancient Delaware worthies, whose camer is too imperfectly known to us to be the subject of distinct sketches, we shall mention only the name of the illustrious Tamenend. This individual stands foremost in the list of all the great men of his nation in any age. He was a mighty warrior, an accomplished statesman, and a pure and high-minded patriot. In private life he was still more distinguished for his virtues, than in public for his talents. His countrymen could only account for the perfections they ascribed to him, by supposing him to be favored with the special communications of the Great Spirit. Ages have elapsed since his death, but his memory was so fresh among the Delawares of the last century. that when Colonel Morgan, of New-Jersey, was sent as an agent among them by Congress, during the Revolution, they conferred on him the title of Tamenend, as the greatest mark of respect they could show for the manners and character of that gentleman; and he was known by his Indian appellation ever afterwands.

About this time, the old chieftain had so many admirers among the whites also, that they made him a maint, inserted his name in calendars, and celebrated has festival on the first day of May, yearly. On that day a numerous society of his votaries walked in procession through the streets of Philadelphia, their hats decorated with bucks'-tails, and proceeded to a sylvan rendezvous out of town, which they called the Wigwam, where, after a long talk or speech had been delivered, and the Calumet of friendship passed around, the remainder of the day was spent in high festivity. A dinner was prepared, and Indian dances performed on the green. The custom ceased a few years after the conclusion of peace, and though other 'Tammany' associations have since existed, they retain little of the model they were formed upon but the name.

The commencement of the Revolutionary war was among the Delawares, as among their more civilized neighbors, a period of great excitement. Strong efforts were made by the British authorities on the northern frontier, and yet stronger ones by individual refugees and vagabonds in the British interest, to prejudice them against the American people, and to induce them to make common cause with their 'Father' over the 'Big Water,' in correcting the sins of his disobedient children. Congress, on the other hand, contented itself with keeping them, as far and as long as possible, in a state of neutrality. In consequence of these opposite influences, and of old prepossessions entertained by various parties and persons in the nation, a violent struggle ensued,—for war on one side, and for peace on the other—in the course of which were developed some of the most remarkable individual traits and diplomatic manœuvres which we have vet had occasion to notice.

The leader of the peace-party was Koguethagechton, called by the Americans Captain White-Eyes. He was the Head-Chief of the Turtle tribe in Ohio; while Captain Pipe, of the Wolf tribe, living and having his council-fire at the distance of fifteen miles northward from the former, devoted his talents to promoting the plan of a belligerent union with the British. Accidental circumstances,—such as old wrongs, or at least imagined ones, from the Americans, on one side, and old favors on the other,—no doubt had their effect in producing this diversity of feeling; but the ambition and jealousy of Pipe,—whose spirit, otherwise noble, was of that haughty order, that he would not 'have served in heaven' when he might 'reign' elsewhere in the universe—are believed to have gone farther than any other cause, both to create and keep up dissensions among the Delawares, and disturbances between them and the whites. Pipe, as even the good Heckewelder allows, was certainly a great man, but White-Eyes was still both his superior and his senior, besides having the advantage of a clean cause and a clear conscience.

Pipe, like other politicians, uniformly professed his readiness, from time to time, to join in any measures proper to 'save the nation;' but the difficulty as uniformly occurred, that these were precisely the same measures which White-Eyes thought would destroy The former, like most of the Wolf tribe, whose temperament he had studied, was warlike, energetic, and restless. He brooded over old resentments,—he panted for revenge,—he longed for the coming of an era which should turn 'rogues' out of office, and bring 'honest men' in. With these feelings, his ingenuity could not be long without adequate arguments and artifices to operate on the minds of his countrymen. Their most remarkable effect, however, it soon became manifest, was to attach them to himself rather than to any particular principles. They were as ready to fight as men need be; but Pipe was expected to monopolize the thinking and talking.

For the better understanding of the principles of the Peace-party, we shall here introduce the exposition made by White-Eyes and others, of the character of the contest between the English and the Americans. Its effect was to convince the Indians, that they had no concern with either, while their welfare clearly suggested the policy, as well as propriety, of maintaining amicable terms with both.

"Suppose a father," it was said, "had a little son whom he loved and indulged while young, but growing up to be a youth, began to think of having some help from him; and making up a small pack, bade him carry it for him. The boy cheerfully takes this pack, following his father with it. The father, finding the boy willing and obedient, continues in this way; and as the boy grows stronger, so the father makes the pack in proportion larger—yet as long as the boy is able to carry the pack, he does so without grumbling. At length, however, the boy having arrived at manhood, while the father is making up the pack for him, in comes a person of an evil disposition, and learning who was the carrier of the pack, advises the father to make it heavier, for surely the son is able to carry a large pack. The father, listening rather to the bad adviser, than consulting his own judgment and the feelings of tenderness, follows the advice of the hardhearted adviser, and makes up a heavy load for his son to carry. The son, now grown up, examining the weight of the load he is to carry, addresses the parent in these words: 'Dear father, this pack is too heavy for me to carry, do pray lighten it; I am willing to do what I can, but am unable to carry this load.' The father's heart having by this time become hardened—and the bad adviser calling to him, 'whit him if he disobeys and refuses to carry the pack,' now in a peremptory tone orders his son to take up the pack and carry it off, or he will whip him, and already takes up a stick to beat him. 'So!' says the son 'am I to be served thus, for not doing what I am unable to do! Well if entreaties avail nothing with you father-and it is to be decided by blows, whether or not I am able to carry a pack so heavy—then I have no other choice left me, but that of resisting your un reasonable demand, by my strength; and so, by striking each other, we may see who is the strongest,"

But this doctrine, however sound, did not prove wholly effectual against the exertions of Pipe, who was continually either making movements, or taking advantage of such as occurred, to disparage the influence of his rival, and, of course, to extend and establish his own. He contradicted whatever was said and counteracted whatever was done by White-Eyes, until the whole system of intercourse of the Delawares with each other and with other nations, became a labrynth of inconsistencies and counterplots.

About the commencement of the war, White-Eyes, with some of his tribe, visited the Americans at Pittsburg, where they met in conference with a number of the Seneca tribe, a people particularly attached to the British interest at that time. The object of their visit probably was to ascertain and perhaps influence the politics of the Delawares; and they relied much on the power of the great confederacy to which they belonged. Not only, however, did they fail to overawe White-Eyes, politically or personally; but they could not prevent him from publicly advocating the principles he avowed. So angry were they at a speech he addressed to the meeting at Pittsburg that they undertook to check him by hinting, in an insolent and sullen manner, that it ill became him to express himself thus independently, whose tribe were but women, and had been made such by the Five Nations—alluding to an old reproach which had often before this been used to humiliate the Dela-Wares.

ì

ŀ

D٤

be

:00

ril-

hie

me

7ip

be:

٠.

)E

æl

0. X

e

,

Frequently it had that effect. But White-Eyes was not of a temper to brook an insult, under any circumstances. With an air of the most haughty disdain, he sat patiently until the Senecas had done, and then rose and replied:

"I know," said he gravely, "I know well, that you consider us a conquered nation—as women—as your inferiors. You have, say you, shortened our legs, and put petticoats on us! You say you have given us a hoe and a corn-pounder, and told us to plant and pound for you—you men—you warriors! But look at me. Am I not full-grown, and have I not a warrior's dress? Aye, I am a man, and these are the arms of a man, showing his musket]—and all that country, [waving his hand proudly in the direction of the Alleghany river] all that country, on the other side of that water, is mine." *

A more courageous address was perhaps never made to any Council of Indians. Indeed, it went so beyond the spirit of his tribe, apprehensive as they were of the indignation of the powerful people he had thus bearded, that, although many were gratified, many others were frightened,-or, perhaps, at Pipe's instigation, pretended to be frightened,-out of the ranks of the Peace-party into those of the War. The Monseys took the lead in that movement, and they even humiliated themselves so much as to send word to the Five Nations that they disapproved of what White-Eves had said. Pipe, about the same time, left off attending the councils of the Turtle tribe, which he had hitherto done regularly,-probably from a conviction that his intrigues were becoming daily more manifest,-and he also endeavored to circulate an impression that White-Eves had made secret engagements with the Americans, with the view of aggrandizing himself at the expense of his countrymen.

The latter, meanwhile, was laboring, night and day, to preserve peace among the tribes, by sending embassies, and by other energetic measures. In some places, he succeeded, but in others the manœuvres of his adversary prevailed. A message sent to the Sandusky Wyandots, in 1776, was insolently answered by a hint to the Delawares, "to keep good shoes in readiness for joining the warriors." White-Eyes himself headed a deputation to a settlement of the same people near Detroit. They however refused to receive his peace-belts, except in presence of the British Governor at that station; and he, when they were tendered in his presence, seized them violently, cut them in pieces, threw them at the feet of the Deputies, and then told White-Eyes, that "if he set any value on his head, he must be gone within half an hour."

*Speaking, according to common custom, in the name of the nation.

Such indefatigable efforts were made by the warparty, and by those foreigners who co-operated with them, especially in circulating reports unfavorable to the American character and cause, that White-Eyes was very near being sacrificed to the hot-headed rashness of his own followers. In March, 1778, a number of tories of infamous character, having escaped from Pittsburg, told the Indians, wherever they went that the Americans were coming upon them from all quarters: and that now was the time, and the only time, for saving themselves, by commencing actwo hostilities. The Delawares were filled with conternation, and, for a day or two, White-Eyes was mable to stem the torrent of popular feeling. But he recovered his influence as they recovered their com-Posure: and well knowing that his conduct in this Wair would be closely watched by his rival, he called a general council of the nation, in which he proposed to delay committing hostilities against the American people for ten days, during which time they might obtain more certain information as to the truth of the assertions of these men. Pipe, considering this a proper time for placing White-Eyes in the back-ground, construed his wise and prudent advice as though he was in the secret, and now proposed to his own council, "to declare every man an enemy to the nation, that should throw an obstacle in the way. that might tend to prevent the taking up arms instantly against the American people."

White-Eyes perceived that the blow was aimed at himself, but he parried it by immediately assembling and addressing his party by themselves: "If you will go out in this war," said he, observing the preparations of some of them, "you shall not go without me. I have taken peace measures, it is true, with the view of saving my tribe from destruction. But if you think me in the wrong, if you give more credit to runaway wagabonds than to your own friends, to a man, to a warrior, to a Delaware,—if you insist upon fighting the Americans,—go! and I will go with you. And I will not go like the bear-hunter, who sets his dogs upon the animal to be beaten about with his paws, while he keeps himself at a safe distance. No! I will lead you on. I will place myself in the front. I will fall with the first of you! You can do as you choose, but as for me I will not survive my nation. I will not live to bewail the miserable destruction of a brave people, who deserved, as you do, a better fate."

This spirited harangue had the desired effect. The assembly declared, with all the enthusiasm which a grave Indian council are ever willing to manifest, that they would at least wait the ten days, as he wished. Some added that they would never fight the Americans, but with him for a leader.

But Pipe and his party redoubled their efforts, and before the appointed term had expired, many of the Delawares had shaved their heads in readiness for the war-plume; and White-Eyes, though his request for delay was still attended to, was threatened with a violent death if he should say one word for the American interest. On the ninth day, vigorous preparations were made for sending out war-parties, and no news had yet arrived to abate the excitement.

At this critical juncture it happened that the German missionary, Mr. Heckewelder, with some attendants, had arrived among the Christian Delawares in the neighborhood of Goschocking, the settlement of White-Eyes, from Pittsburg. He became an eye and ear witness of the sequel of the affair, and we shall therefore avail ourselves of his narrative.

"Finding the matter so very pressing, and even not admitting of a day's delay, I consented, that after a few hours' rest and sleep, and furnished with a trusty companion and a fresh horse, I would proceed on, when between three and four o'clock in the morning, the national assistant, John Martin, having called on me for the purpose, we set out, swimming our horses across the Muskingum river, and taking a circuit through the woods in order to avoid the encampment of the war-party, which was close to our path. Arriving by ten o'clock in the forenoon within sight of the town, a few yells were given by a person who had discovered us, intended to notify the inhabitants that a white man was coming, and which immediately drew the whole body of Indians into the streets. but although I saluted them in passing them, not a single person returned the compliment, which, as my conductor observed, was no good omen. Even Captain White-Eyes, and the other chiefs who always had befriended me, now stepped back when I reached out my hand to them, which strange conduct however did not dismay me, as I observed among the crowd some men well known to me as spies of Captain Pipe's, watching the actions of these peace-chiefs, wherefore I was satisfied that the act of refusing me the hand, had been done from policy, and not from any ill will towards my person. Indeed, in looking around, I thought I could read joy in the countenances of many of them, in seeing me among them at so critical a juncture, when they, but a few days before, had been told by those deserters, that nothing short of their total destruction had been resolved upon by the 'long knives' (the Virginians, or new American people.) Yet as no one would reach out his hand to me, I inquired into the cause, when Captain White-Eyes boldly stepping forward, replied; 'that by what had been told them by those men, (M'Kee and party,) they no longer had a single friend among the American people; if therefore this be so, they must consider every white man who came to them from that side, as an enemy, who only came to them to deceive them, and put them off their guard, for the purpose of giving the enemy an opportunity of taking them by surprise.' I replied, that the imputation was unfounded, and that, were I not their friend, they never would have seen me here. 'Then, (continued Captain White-Eyes,) you will tell us the truth with regard to what I state to you!'—Assuring him of this, he, in a ind.

E G

10.000

ibei

Ъr

ù

10 P F E C

竝

8

strong tone, asked me: 'Are the American armies all cut to pieces by the English troops? Is General Washington killed? Is there no more a Congress, and have the English hung some of them, and taken the remainder to England, to hang them there? Is the whole country beyond the mountains in the possession of the English; and are the few thousand Americans who have escaped them, now embodying themselves on this side of the mountains, for the purpose of killing all the Indians in this country, even our women and children? Now do not deceive us, but speak the truth' (added he;) 'is this all true, what I have said to you?' I declared before the whole assembly, that not one word of what he had just now told me was true, and holding out to him, as I had done before, the friendly speeches sent by me for them, which he however as yet refused to accept, I thought by the countenances of most of the by-standers, that I could perceive that the moment bid fair for their listening at least to the contents of those speeches, and accidentally catching the eye of the drummer, I called to him to beat the drum for the Assembly to meet for the purpose of hearing what their American Brethren had to say to them! A general smile having taken place, White-Eyes thought the favorable moment arrived to put the question, and having addressed the assembly in these words: 'Shall we, my friends and relatives, listen once more to those who call us their brethren?' Which question, being loudly and as with one voice answered in the affirmative, the drum was beat, and the whole body quickly repairing to the spacious council-house, the speeches, all of which were of the most pacific nature were read and interpreted to them, when Captair White-Eyes rose, and in an elaborate address to the Assembly, took particular notice of the good disposition of the American people towards the Indians, observing, that they had never as yet, called on them to fight the English, knowing that wars were destructive to nations, and they had from the beginning of the war to the present time, always advised them (the Indians) to remain quiet, and not take up the hatchet against either side. A newspaper, containing the capitulation of General Burgoyne's army, being found enclosed in the packet, Captain White-Eyes once more rose up, and holding this paper unfolded, with both his hands, so that all could have a view of it, said, 'See, my friends and relatives, this document containeth great events, not the song of a bird, but the truth!'—then, stepping up to me, he gave me his hand, saying, 'you are welcome with us, brother;' when every one present followed his example."

Thus White-Eyes again triumphed over his rival; and the chagrin of the latter was the more keen, be cause, relying on the improved prospects of his par ty, he had recently committed himself more openly than ever before. But the spies whom he kept constantly at Goschocking, now brought him the doleful news that the predictions of White-Eves were all ver-That Chiestain himself completed his success by sending runners, immediately after the Council broke up, to the Shawanese towns on the Scioto. where the tories had already gone for the purpose of trying their game upon that tribe. "Grand-children!" was the laconic message, "ye Shawanese! Some days ago a flock of birds from the East lit at Goschocking, singing a song here which had well nigh proved our ruin. Should these birds, which, on leaving us, took their flight towards Scioto, endeavor to impose their song on you, do not listen to them, for they Ee!"

þŧ.

b

But White-Eyes was not destined to enjoy the result of his labors. In the winter of 1779-80, he visited Pittsburg, for the purpose of consulting with the Indian Agent on the means suitable for preserving peace. He accompanied General McIntosh and his army to Tuscarowas, (where a fort was to be built for the protection of the neutral Indians,) took the small-pox at that place, and soon died.

The event produced a sensation almost unprece-lented in the Delaware tribe, and throughout a wiregion in their vicinity. The intelligence was sent various contederate or relative tribes, at the distar of hundreds of miles, and counter deputations of condence soon came in from all quarters. We she close this chapter with Mr. Heckewelder's according to the embassy of the Cherokees, which strikingly dicates the reputation acquired by White-Eyes doing his life, as well as the great respect subsequental paid to his memory.

The deputation, consisting of fourteen men, whom two were principal chiefs, were accompani from their country to Goschocking, by a nephew the late Captain White-Eyes, who, soon after t commencement of the American revolution, had be despatched thither by the Delaware Chiefs, for t purpose of using his endeavors in keeing that 1 tion at peace. When this deputation had arriv within three miles of Goschocking, and within c of Lichtenau, they made a halt for the purpose having the customary ceremony performed on the This was done by one of the councillors from t village, who, by an address and with a string of wa pum, drew the thorns and briars out of their legs a feet; healed the sores and bruises they had receiv by hitting against logs; wiped the dust and sweat their bodies; and cleansed their eyes and ears, so the they might both see and hear well; and fina anointed all their joints, that their limbs might ag become supple.* They were then served with v tuals brought from Lichtenau, and they continu there the remainder of that day.

On the next morning, two of the councillors for Goschocking, deputed for the purpose, informed to missionary and national assistants at Lichtenau, the by order of their Chiefs, they were to conduct to Cherokee deputation into their village, from when they were expected to join in the procession to Go and there attend the condoling ceremowhich being agreed to, these soon brought one leading them in front, and the other up the rear.

* All which ceremonies are performed figuratively.

g within about two hundred yards of the l in sight of it, (all marching Indian file), they heir pieces, which compliment was instantd by the young men of the town, drawn up rpose: then raising a melancholy song, they i singing, until they had reached the long irposely built for their reception; yet not rst having lodged their arms against some had passed, at a small distance from the eing seated on benches prepared for the pure deputies on the opposite side,)—a dead sivailed for about half an hour, and all present eyes on the ground. At length one of these imed the Crow, rose, and with an air of sorin a low voice, with his eyes cast up to heae to the following effect: norning, after having arisen from my sleep. rding to my custom, I stepped out at the e what weather we had. I observed at one he horizon a dark cloud projecting above and looking steadfastly for its movement or ance, found myself mistaken, since it neither ed nor moved from the spot, as other clouds ng the same cloud successively every morthat always in the same place, I began to at could be the cause of this singular phe-; at length it struck me, that as the cloud in the direction that my grandfather dwelt, g might be the matter with him, which causrief. Anxious to satisfy myself, I resolved ly grandfather, and see if any thing was the ith him. I accordingly went, steering a the direction I had observed the cloud to be. at my grandfather's, whom I found quite atc, hanging his head and the tears running cheeks! Casting my eyes around in the M hopes of discovering the cause of his grief, I obser yonder a dwelling closed up, and from which smoke* appeared to ascend! Looking in another rection, I discovered an elevated spot of fresh ear on which nothing was seen growing; and her found the cause of my grandfather's grief. No w der he is so grieved! No wonder he is weeping a sobbing, with his eyes cast towards the ground Even I cannot help weeping with my grandfath seeing in what a situation he is! I cannot proc for grief!"

Here, after having seated himself for about twe minutes, as though deeply afflicted, he again ar and receiving from the principal chief, who was s ed by his side, a large string of wampum, st "Grandfather! Lift up your head and hear what y grand-children have to say to you! These hav discovered the cause of your grief, it shall be d away! See, grandfather! I level the ground on y der spot of yellow earth, and put leaves and br thereon to make it invisible! I also sow seeds on spot, so that both grass and trees may grow thereo (Here handing the string to the Delaware Chiefs succession, and taking up another, he continue "Grandfather!-The seed which I had sown has ready taken root; nay, the grass has already cove the ground, and the trees are growing!" (Hand this string, likewise to the Delaware Chief, and tak up a third string of wampum, he added:) my grandfather, the cause of your grief being rem ed, let me dry up your tears! I wipe them from y eyes! I place your body, which, by the weight grief and a heavy heart, is leaning to one side, ir proper posture! Your eyes shall be henceforth cl and your ears open as formerly! The work is n finished!" Handing this string likewise to the I aware Chief, he now stepped forward to where

* Meaning no person occupying the house.
† The grave.

Chief and his Councillors were seated, and having first shaken hands with these, he next did the same with all present, the whole embessy following his example. This being done, and all again seated as before, the Delaware Chief, Gelelemend, *replied:

"Grand-children!—You did not come here in vain!
You have performed a good work, in which the Great Spirit assisted you! Your Grandfather makes you welcome with him."

The meeting, having continued thanky three hours, then broke up. On the day following, the Chiefs of both nations entered on business relating to their national concerns, and finally made a, mutual covenant for the continued maintenance of the party and principles of White-Eves.

It is honorable to the American Congress that after the decease of their best friend among the Indians, they took measures for the maintenance and education of his son. On the journals of that body, under date of June 20th, 1785, is the following passage:

"Resolved, That Mr. Morgan [TARREHEND, probably,] be empowered and requested to continue the care and direction of George White-Eyes for one year, and that the Board of Treasury take order for the payment of the expenses necessary to carry into ansecution the views of Congress in this respect."

The journal of December, 1775, records an inter-

new of Congress with the father.

<sup>. *</sup> Commonly called KILL-BUCK.

CHAPTER IX.

Observations on the character of White-Eyes—P:pe's comment on his death—The latter gains and sustains an ascendancy in the Delaware nation—Glickkican, Netawatwees and Wingemund—Subsequent career of Pipe—Joins the British and fights against the Americans—Grand Indian council at Detroit—Pipe's spirited speech on that occasion—Makes charges against the Missionaries, but fails to prove them—Remarks on his habits, principles and talents.

The fact that Captain Pipe and his associates began to gain the ascendancy in the Delaware nation immediately on the death of his great antagonist, and that they afterwards supported it with almost uninterrupted success, is alone sufficient to indicate the influence and character of White-Eyes. Indeed, Pipe himself paid to his memory the compliment of declaring, with a solemn air, that "the Great Spirit had probably put him out of the way, that the nation might be saved." That sagacious personage was well aware that neither Kill-Buck, nor Big-Cat, nor *Glickkican, nor even

<sup>**</sup>The sight of a gun-barrel,' and afterwards baptised by the Moravians, and named Isaac. He was Chief Councillor and Speaker of the old Sachem, PAKANKE, who ruled over the Delawares at Kaskaskunk (in Ohio,) and was a man of uncommon military and oratorical talent. After his own christianization, he was a highly efficient advocate and patron of the Christian party. Having thereby, as well as by his spirit and influence, become obnoxious to their enemies during the Revolution, several attempts were made to overawe, bribe and destroy him; but they all failed. At length a considerable party was fitted out, in 1781, for the express purpose of taking him prisoner. They found him at Salem, but doubting whether the old warrior's pacific principles would assure their safety, they dared not enter his hut. He saw

sgether, would adequately occupy the station of eccased Chieftain.

hite-Eyes was distinguished as much for his er virtues as for his courage and energy; and as is friendly disposition towards the Americans, cularly, on which some imputations were indusedly thrown by his enemies, we could desire no revidence of its sincerity than are still extant. hat curious document, the Journal of Frederic, who, as early as 1758, was sent among the Ohio wares by the Governor of one of the States, for the ose of inducing them to renounce the French ice, is recorded, the 'speech' which Post carried, and the closing paragraphs of which were as ws:—

Brethren, when you have settled this peace and dship, and finished it well, and you send the great e-belt to me, I will send it to all the nations of my it; they will all join to it, and we all will hold it fast. Brethren, when all the nations join to this friend-then the day will begin to shine clear over us.

of them before long from a window, and instantly ed out, and called to them. 'Friends!' said he, 'by manœuvres I conclude you are come for me. hy do you hesitate;—Obey your orders; I am ready ibmit. You seem to fear old Glickkican. was a time when I would have scorned to submit ch cowardly slaves. But I am no more Glickkican, Isaac, a believer in the true God, and for his sake I suffer anything, even death.' Seeing them still ate, he stepped up to them with his hands placed his back. 'There!' he continued, 'you would tie f you dared—tie me, then, and take me with you ready.' They now mustered courage to do as he Soon after, Glickkican was murdered, with a number of his Christian countrymen, by a banditti merican ruffians who suspected, or pretended to susthem, of hostile designs. Probably the result was ght about by the machinations of his Indian enemies.

In Proud's History of Pennsylvania.

When we hear once more of you, and we join together, then the day will be still, and no wind, or storm, will come over us, to disturb us.

"Now, Brethren, you know our hearts, and what we have to say; be strong, if you do what we have now told you, and in this peace all the nations agree to join. Now, Brethren, let the king of England know what our mind is as soon as possibly you can."

Among the subscribers to this speech appears the name of White-Eyes, under the form of the Indian term Cochguacawkeghton; nor have we met with any proof that he ever from that time wavered for a moment in his attachment to the American interest, as opposed first to the French, and afterwards to the English. Post himself, in 1762, was permitted to build a house on the banks of the Muskingum, where he had a lot of land given him, about a mile distant from the village of White-Eyes; and so, when Heckewelder first visited that country, during the same season, he informs us that, 'the War-Chief Koguethagechun, kindly entertained and supplied him and his party.

About the beginning of the Revolutionary war, when some of the Indians were much exasperated by murders and trespasses which certain civilized ruffians committed on the frontiers, an Ohio trader was met and massacred in the woods by a party of Senecas, who, having in their rage cut up the body and garnished the bushes with the remains, raised the scalp-yell and marched off in triumph. White-Eyes being in the vicinity and hearing the yell, instantly commenced a search for the body, the remnants of which he collected and buried. The party returned on the following day, and observing what had been done, privately opened the grave, and scattered the contents more widely than before. But White-Eves was this time on the watch for them. He repaired to the spot again the moment they left it, succeeded in finding every part of the mangled body, and then carefully interred it in a grave dug with his own hands where it was at length suffered to repose unmolested.

It was about the same time when this affair happened, that the Chieftain saved the life of one Duncan, an American peace-messenger, whom he had undertaken to escort through a section of the wilderness. A hostile Shawanee was upon the point of discharging his musket at Duncan from behind a tree, when White-Eyes rushed forward, regardless of his own peril, and compelled the savage to desist. In 1777, Heckewelder had occasion to avail himself of a similar kindness. Rather rashly, as he acknowledges, he that year undertook to traverse the forests from the Muskingum to Pittsburg, wishing to visit his English friends in that White-Eves resided at a distance of seventen miles, but hearing of his intended journey, he immediately came to see him, accompanied by another Chief named Wingemund, and by several of his young men.

These, he said, his good friend, the Missionary, should have as an escort. And moreover he must needs go himself: "He could not suffer me to go," says that gentlemen, "while the Sandusky warriors were out on war-excursions, without a proper escort and himself at my side." And it should be observed, that besides the Sandusky savages, there were several other tribes who had already engaged on the British side, and were spreading death and desolation along the whole of the American frontier. The party set out together, and reached their destination in safety. An alarm occurred only on one occasion, when the scouts discovered a suspicious track, and report was made accordingly. White-Eyes, who was riding before his friend, while Wingemund brought up the rear, turned about and asked if he felt afraid? "No!" said the Missionary, "not while you are with me." "You are right." quickly rejoined White-Eyes? "You are right; no man shall harm you, till I am laid prostrate." "Nor even then," added Wingemund, "for they must conquer me also-they must lay us side by side." Mr. Heckewelder certainly did them but justice in believing the both would have redeemed their promises.

&quot;A noted religious impostor.

The other Moravians, and the Indian Congregatiunder their charge in Ohio, were still more indebt to the good Chieftain. Loskiel states,* that in 17 the Christian party had become obnoxious to a majity of the Pagan Delaware chiefs, and it was sevetimes proposed to expel them by force. But G brought their counsel to nought, he adds, "and to pointed for this purpose the first Captain among Delawares, called White Eyes," who kept the chi and council in awe, and would not suffer them to injuthe Missionaries. Finding his efforts still unavailing he at length went so far as to separate himself who from his opponents, resolved to renounce power, coutry and kindred for the sake of these just and beneven the sake of these past and the sake of the

His firmness met with a deserved success. Ev the old Chief Netawatwees, who had opposed h most fiercely, acknowledged the injustice which I been done him; and not only changed his views in gard to the Christians, but published his recantation presence of the whole council. White-Eyes then ag came forward, and repeated a proposal for a nation regulation to be made—whereby the Christians show be specially put under the Delaware protection which had formerly been rejected. It was prom ly agreed to, and the act was passed. The old Chi tain expressed great joy on that occasion ;- "I am old man," said he, "and know not how long I may li I therefore rejoice, that I have been able to make t Our children and grand-children will reap benefit of it,-and now I am ready to die whene God pleases."+

* History of the Missions of the United Brethren, & London, 1794.

† He died at Pittsburg in 1776, much lamented by Delawares and many neighboring nations. "This w man," says Loskiel, spared no pains to conciliate affection of all his neighbors. He sent frequent emb

iel states, that White-Eves was in his own onvinced of the truth of the gospel; that this ident in all his speeches in behalf of the Chrisuring which he was frequently so moved that evented his words; and that he likewise dewith confidence, that no prosperity would ate Indian affairs, unless they received and behe saving gospel sent them from God, by means Brethren. Not long before his death he took occasion to repeat the last will and testament watwees.—" That the Delawares should hear d of God." He held the bible and some speloks in his hand, and addressed the Council in a f the most animated and moving eloquence. iends!" he concluded, "You have now heard ng wish of our departed Chief. I will therefore ogether my young men, and their childrenneel down before that Great Spirit who creatand me—I will pray unto him, that he may ercy upon us, and reveal his will unto us, we cannot declare it to those who are yet une will pray unto the Lord our God, to make it to our children and our childrens' children." White-Eyes regarded christianity more as a civil religious system. He was a man of enlarged I views, and no less a patriot than a statesman. ds he aimed at were far more his country's s own. He observed the superiority of the en to the red; and nearer home, the prosperity piness of the Christian Delawares; and he conhimself thoroughly of the true causes of both. refore earnestly desired, that his whole nation be civilized, to which result he considered his Grand-Children, admonishing them to keep and proved in truth a wise Grandfather to them. the Senior Chief of the nation, his opinion was t weight, and he declared himself warmly in favor Christians, and first invited them to settle on the gum. His grandson, nephew, and son and fampioined them.

christianity, as he had seen it taught by the good Mo ravians, the best positosle promotive, as undoubtedly it was.

But in this noble solicitude for his countrymen, h forgot himself. Hence even Loskiel, on mentioning hi decease, states, with an almost reluctant honesty, the "Captain White-Eyes, who had so often advised other Indians, with great earnestness, to believe in the Gospe of Jesus Christ, but had always postponed joining th believers himself on account of being yet entangled in po litical concerns, was unexpectedly called into eternity; adding, affectionately, that the "Indian Congregation to whom he had rendered very essential services, wa much affected at the news of his death, and coul not but hope, that God our Saviour had received hi soul in mercy." Mr. Heckewelder sums up the mat ter by saying-"His ideas were that unless the Ir dians changed their mode of living, they would i time come to nothing; and to encourage them toward such a change, he told them to take the example o the Christian Indians, who by their industry had ev ery thing they could wish for." In a word, there wa more philanthropy and more philosophy in the reli gion of White-Eyes, than there was piety. Hence his eloquence, his energy, his strong affection for the Missionaries, and his sacrifices and services for then and for his countrymen. He was a good man, w believe, by the force of native conscience, as he wa a great man by the force of native sense; and though to have learned Christianity, in addition to loving some of those who professed it, might have made him both better and greater than he was, we cannot bu hope, as it is, with the Christian Delawares, "that Go our Saviour has received his soul in mercy."

It would give us very sincere pleasure to be able to say as much for the Paganism of Captain Pipe, who on the contrary, was opposed to the religion of the whites as inveterately as any of the New-England Schems of the seventeenth century, and apparently for similar reasons. "The Sachens of the country we generally set against us," wrote Mr. Elliot in 1650,*-"and counter-work the Lord by keeping off their men from praying to God as much as they can: and the reason of it is this; they plainly see that religion will make a great change among them, and cut them off from their former tyranny, &c." Pipe, too, with all his talent, was obnoxious to some very plain strictures regarding his own morality, and of course had no theoretical partiality for lectures upon that subject. He was inimical to White-Eyes, especially, because the latter supported the cause of reform; and rather than wand second to him, and at the same time surrender his own bad habits, he determined at all hazards to array a party in opposition. It was both a personal and a political movement, the objects being self-de-Ence, in the first place, and in the second, distinction. Such being the character of the scheme, it must will be admitted that he exhibited great energy and great ingenuity in promoting it. Some of his manœumes have been noticed; and after his rival's decease, his own declarations, particularly, were much more frequent and fearless, and therefore more effectual than they had been before. "Thus," says Heckewelder, "when a young man of his tribe, who had received his education in Virginia, under the influence of Dr. Walker, on his return into the Indian country in 1779, pread unfavorable reports of the Virginian people; representing them as exceeding the Indians in vicious acts—their beating the negroes so unmercifully, &c. &c. Pipe would mockingly enumerate such vicious and cruel acts, as the benefits of civilization." He could at the same time, with truth, set forth the poverty of the United States, in not having even a blanket, a shirt, or other article of Indian clothing, to give them in exchange for their peltry; whereas, (said he) were it not for the English, we should have to suffer, and perhaps many of us perish for want. Pipe a the Monseys, we are told elsewhere, were those w were most dreaded, and the effect of his operation was such, but one year after the decease of Whi Eyes in the midst of his triumphs, that in 1781, Peace-Chiefs had for their own safety to withdremselves from their several nations, and take refiat Pittsburg.

*THE LIGHT APPEARING, &c. London, 1651.

† Narrative, p. 286 and passim: "We were obliged to wait for Pipe's becoming sufficiently sober,"—&c.

In regard to the personal habits of Pipe, it may doing him, as well as several other Indians of so distinction, no more than justice, to allude in exter ation to the well known nature of the temptation which they have sometimes been exposed, and es cially on the frontiers, during war, and the excitem of an attempt by one civilized party to engage th services against another. The peculiar physical cumstances which, together with the character of the education, go to diminish their power of self-cont need not be enlarged on. It is sufficient to say, t it would be a task more easy than gratifying to pro that their misfortune in this particular has only follo ed after the fault of their civilized neighbors. are you, my friend?" said a gentleman in Pipe's ti to an Indian at Pittsburg, who was not so much toxicated as not to be ashamed of his situation. "I name is Black-fish," he replied; "At home I an clever fellow-Here, I am a hog."*

* Mr. Heckewelder's anecdote of the Indian who ca into Bethlehem (Penn.) to dispose of his peltry, thre light on a great source of the evil not alluded to the text, and the effects of which, among the West tribes to this day are beyond calculation. "Well Thas," said a trader to him, "I believe you have turned Me vian." "Moravian!" answered the Indian, "what ma you think so?"—"Because," replied the other, "used to come to us, to sell your skins and peltry, and ryou trade them away to the Moravians." "So!" reject the Indian, "now I understand you we!!, and I kr what you mean to say. Now hear me.—See, my friewhen I come to this place with my skins and peltry when I come to this place with my skins and peltry.

we are not under the disagreeable necessity of ising for every thing we relate of Captain He gave many evidences of a natural honor manity, even amid the bloodiest scenes of the ition, and contrary to the dictation of those ere qualified, by every thing but feelings, to und his duty better than himself. Under strong nent he attached himself to the British interest. wards the close of the war scalping-parties went He was also prejudiced om his settlement. the Christian Indians, and molested them much. ne of these things were done in his cooler mo and what is more creditable to him, there is sason to believe that he repented of all. The ce of this fact appears in a transaction which ace at Detroit in November, 1781, with the par-3 of which, as furnished by Loskiel and others, all conclude this narrative.

the occasion referred to, a grand Indian Counconvened at Detroit, at which were present numbers of various tribes, including Captain Wolf warriors, who had just returned from a g expedition. Four of the Moravian Mises were also there, having been summoned to at the suggestion of Pipe and others, for the purf deciding upon several charges alleged agains

The hall was filled with the concourse, the eing separately seated all around it, on the right hand of the Commandant, while the Delawith Pipe and his Councillors at their head, lirectly in front. A war-chief of each of the the people are kind; they give me plenty of good s to eat, and pay me in money, or whatever I and no one says a word to me about drinking either do I ask for it! When I come to your place by peltry, all call to me: 'Come, Thomas! here's rink heartily, drink! it will not hurt you.' All done for the purpose of cheating me. When you obtained from me all you want, you call me a n dog, and kick me out of the room."

—N

two divisions of Indians, held a stick in his hand three or four feet in length, strung with scalps w they had taken in their last foray on the Amer frontier.

The Council was opened by the Commandant's nifying to Captain Pipe, that he might make hi port, when the latter rose from his seat, holdi stick in his left hand:

"Father!"—he began; and here he paused, tu round to the audience with a most sarcastic look, then proceeded in a lower tone, as addressing the "I have said futher, though indeed I do not! why I should call him so—I have never known father but the French—I have considered the En only as brothers. But as this name is imposed us, I shall make use of it and say—

"Father"—fixing his eyes again on the Comdant.—"Some time ago you put a war-hatchet my hands, saying, 'take this weapon and try ito heads of my enemies, the Long-Knives, and k know afterwards if it was sharp and good.'

"Father!—At the time when you gave me weapon, I had neither cause nor wish to go to against a foe who had done me no injury. But say you are my father—and call me your child-in obedience to you I received the hatchet. I I that if I did not obey you, you would withhold me* the necessaries of life, which I could procur where but here.

"Father! You may perhaps think me a foo risking my life at your bidding—and that in a c in which I have no prospect of gaining any thing. it is your cause, and not mine—you have rais quarrel among yourselves—and you ought to fit out—It is your concern to fight the Long-Knix You should not compel your children, the India expose themselves to danger for your sake.

"Father!-Many lives have already been lo

* Meaning his tribe.

year account—The tribes have suffered, and been weakened—Children have lost parents and brothers—Wives have lost husbands—It is not known how many more may perish before your war will be at an end.

*Father!—I have said, you may perhaps think me a fool, for thus thoughtlessly rushing on your enemy! Do not believe this, Father: Think not that I want sense to convince me, that although you now pretend to keep up a perpetual enmity to the Izang-Kinses, you may, before long, conclude a peace with them.

"Father! You say you love your children, the Indians.—This you have often told them; and indeed it is your interest to say so to them, that you may have them at your service.

"But, Father! Who of us can be here that you can love a people of a different colour from your can, better than those who have a white sent, nee your selves?

"Father! Pay attention to what I are group to so While you, Father, are writing the "top provide much in the same manner as a more war at any on the game; while I am it has not to your warpen you gave the I may better a complete warpen you gave the I may better a complete was back to the page from states and what shall use? Persage I may see you were that may be page I may see you warpen you gave the same that it is a see that I am you want to see him laugh at my hard you want to see him laugh at my hard you want to see him laugh at my hard you want to see the page I am you want to see him laugh at my hard you want to see the page I may be see him laugh at my hard you want to see the page I may be seen to see the page I may be seen to see that I may see the page I may be seen to see that I may be seen to see the page I may be seen to

"Now, Father there is what the near time with hitchet you gave me." I have my the left of the with the left of the wind the left of the latter of of th

· Moran ng i a serie

I did not do all that I might have done. No, I not. My heart failed within me. I felt compass for your enemy. Innocence* had no part in y quarrels; therefore I distinguished—I spared. It some live flesh, which, while I was bringing to y I spied one of your large canoes, on which I pu for you. In a few days you will receive this fle and find that the skin is of the same color with yown.

"Father! I hope you will not destroy what I he saved. You, Father, have the means of preserve that which would perish with us from want. I warrior is poor, and his cabin is always empty; your house, Father, is always full."

During the delivery of this harangue, which is s to have produced a great effect on all present, a especially on those who understood the language which it was spoken, the Orator two or three tin advanced so far towards the Commandant, in t heat of his excitement, that one of the offic present thought proper to interfere and requ him to move back. The other war-chiefs i made their speeches, and then the Comman (an honorable and humane man, notwithstanding Orator's strictures on his Father,)—called upon to substantiate his charges against the Miss ries. Pipe, who was still standing, was unwill make the attempt, but felt embarrassed. He to shift and shuffle, (says Loskiel,) and bendi wards his Councillors, asked them what he show They all hung their heads, and were silent denly, recollecting himself and rising up, he as the Commandant. "I said before that so thing might have happened, but now I will the plain truth. The Missionaries are innoces they have done, they were compelled to do to their having interpreted letters which ware Chief received from Pittsburg, &c. ] to blame—We forced them to it, when they refused."

* Meaning women and children.

After some farther conversation the Commandant declared the Missionaries to be acquitted of all the accusations brought against them.

Pipe expressed his satisfaction at the result, and on returning from the council-house, he asked some of the Delaware Chieftains who were present how they liked what he said. He observed, that he knew it was true, and added; "I never wished your teachers any harm, knowing that they love the Intians: but I have all along been imposed on, and importuned to do what I did by those who do not love them; and now, when these were to speak, they hung their heads, leaving me to extricate myself, after telling our Father things they had dictated and persuaded me to tell him." This declaration has decidedly the air of candour and truth; and the Captain's subsequent conduct was much more in accordance with the spirit of it than it had been before. He did not however distinguish himself particularly after the close of the war, and even the time of his death has not come within our knowledge, although we have reason to believe that he was living, and able to visit the City of Washington, as late as 1817.

N 2

大ははははは

CHAPTER X.

State of several Southern tribes during the last century—The English send deputies to the Cherokers, in 1756-Their lives threatened, and saved by Attakul-Lakulla—Account of that Chieftain and his principles—The party opposed to him headed by Occonstrota—War with the Colonies in 1759 and two years following—Anecdotes of both these Chiefs—Salouer, Futor, and others—Several battles—Peace concluded—Attakullakulla visits Charleston—His subsequent career, and that of Occonostota—Remarks on their character.

Cotemporary with the individuals who have just been mentioned, were a number of noted chieftains among the more Southern tribes. Of them we may take this occasion to say, that the Chickasaws generally affected the English interest; and the Creeks, the French;—so that the friendship or the hostility of Great-Mortar, the Standing-Turkey, the Wolf-King, and the other leading men among the latter tribe was nearly neutralized, as regarded the several civilized parties, by the counteraction of the former.

The Cherokees had been friendly to the English ever since the treaty of 1730; but, owing partly to the influence of the Mortar, and partly to the direct exertions of the French, they had now become wavering In 1756, deputies were and divided in sentiment. sent among them, to secure their aid against the French. A council was convened, and was likely to terminate favorably, when tidings suddenly came that a party of Cherokees, who had visited the French on the Ohio, were massacred by some of the Virginians on their return home. The Council was in an uproar, as much as an Indian Council could be,—the gravest political assembly on earth,—at once. Many cried aloud that vengeance should be taken on the persons Deputies; and it was not without a great exerf influence, that they were at length rescued by MULLAMULLA, or the LITTLE-CARPENTER. is is the earliest appearance of that renowned tain in history, though he is said to have been ly famous both among the Cherokees and the sh, especially for his magnanimity, wisdom, and ration. Nor has there ever been, upon the contia more faithful or useful friend to the English We cannot better illustrate his career or his cter than by comparing both with those of White-: and indeed, some of the incidents related of chief, independently of other circumstances. it highly probable, that a diplomatic and persond understanding was constantly maintained bethem.

e White-Eyes, too, Attakullakulla was opposed war-party, the chief difference being that it was ermally organized, and that it generally operated vor of the French. At the head of it was Oc-TOTA, or the GREAT-WARRIOR, a man whose ordinary prowess procured him his title, and memory is to this day warmly cherished among antrymen. Pursuing our comparison, he should d us of Pipe; but the suggestion does him in-He was not only for war, but a warrior-in a 'great warrior.' He fought, and bled, and where the other appeared only in that capacibear-hunter with dogs, which White-Eyes imto him. He was sincere to enthusiasm in his ples, and frank and fearless almost to fool-hardin professing and pursuing them. He had as talent as Pipe, and far more virtue. ucannostota," says a respectable authority of a little subsequent to that just mentioned, "is rel again from the French fort with powder and ecompanied with some Frenchmon—how many ot learn." And again, soon afterwards,-"Since mostota returned from the French with the and ammunition, and has had those assurances from the Creeks, he says, "What nation, or what per learn I afraid of? I do not fear all the forces whithe great King George can send against me amountains." And yet the Great-Warrior venot rash, as we shall soon learn from the sequel.

A strong excitement followed the provocation ready mentioned; and although the elder part of a nation remained calm, and Attakullakulla and Occa nostota were both against instant war, the French en saries wrought so effectually on the younger warric that parties of them took the field, and the Engl frontiers became the scene of a horrid series of a vastation and massacre. The Governor of Sot Carolina prepared for active hostilities, and the a litia of the whole Province were summoned to m at Congarces.

But no sooner did the Cherokees hear of this mo ment than they sent thirty-two of their chief m among whom was the Great-Warrior, to settle all c ferences at Charleston. A conference ensued, 1 burthen of which however was assumed by the Go ernor alone; for when,-after he had made a lo speech of accusations, and concluded with sayi that the Deputies must follow his troops, or he wor not be answerable for their safety, -Occonnost gravely rose to reply, the Governor interrupted him a forbade him to proceed. He was determined t nothing should prevent his military expedition; a at all events "he would hear no talk in vindication the Orator's countrymen, nor any proposals with gard to peace."

The Great-Warrior was indignant, and his copanions were still more so than himself. It must allowed, that the Governor's deportment on this osion, independently of his treatment of the Deput out of Council, was in the highest degree insulti. The Warrior felt it the more keenly, because he I n appointed to speak, and had prepared himself. 3 Cherokees were conscious, too, that the English originally occasioned the war. The sacred respect ched in their view,—as it is in that of the Indians e generally even now,-to the dignity of their ors, may be gathered from the well-authenticated cdote of the Virginian Chieftain who was rashly rrupted in a Conference with the English by one is own subjects. He split the offender's head 1 a tomahawk at a single blow, and then calmiv seeded with his speech.* 'he Deputies were detained several days, at the end which they accompanied the Governor and his ps to Congarees, where were collected fourteen dred men. Accompanied, we say,-but not freethey were even made prisoners, to prevent their uping, (as two had already done,) and a Captain's rd was set over them. No longer, says the histo-. could they conceal their resentment; sullen and omy countenances showed that they were stung he heart. To make the matter worse, on reaching rt Prince-George, on the borders of their own terry, they were all confined in a miserable hut. reely sufficient to accommodate a tenth part of ir number. lut the troops becoming discontented and mutinous, Governor dared not advance any farther against the my. He therefore sent for Attakullakulla, as beesteemed the wisest man in the nation, and the et steady friend to the English." The summons s promptly obeyed, and a conference took place on 17th of December, (1759.) The Governor made ong speech as before, to the effect that the GREAT me would not suffer his people to be destroyed thout satisfaction; that he was determined to have and that twenty-four Cherokee murderers, whom named, must be given up in the outset, for which he would graciously allow the term of twenty

* We refer to Charleston, (S. C.) papers.

† Ramsay's History of South Carolina.

* Beverly.

The Little-Carpenter very calmly replied :-- I membered the treaties alluded to by the Gove because he had helped to make them. He owner good conduct of South Carolina, as also alleged complained of Virginia, as having caused the pr misunderstanding. He could not forbear adding the Governor did not treat all the tribes alike more than all the whites treated the Cherokees ali remembered that, when several Carolinians we led a few years before by the Choctaws, satisf was neither demanded nor given. Finally, he ed the release of some of the Deputies, that they assist him in endeavoring to procure the perfort of the Governor's terms, though he was by no confident that they either would or could be con with.

Agreeably to this suggestion, the Governor re the Great-Warrior, together with FIFTOE and LOUEH, the Chief-Men of the towns of Keowe The latter, on the day ensuing, si dered two Indians, who were immediately p irons. But all the Cherokees in the vicinity nov through fear of the same fate, and it became im ble to ccamplete the required number. Attakull abruptly commenced his return home in despair the moment the Governor ascertained his depe messengers were sent to induce him to turn The good Chief again obeyed the summons. A ty was negotiated, the result of which was that ty-six of the deputies were detained "until as of the murderers should be given up," nomina their free consent, but in fact by force. Indian was surrendered, making three in all, a three soon after died in confinement at Charl The small-pox breaking out in the army abo same time, the troops dispersed in disorder,-t pedition having already cost the province £25.0 and the Governor returned 'in triumph' to his c

But the rejoicings on account of the peace were carcely over, when news arrived that the Cherokees and killed fourteen whites within a mile of Fort Jeorge. The Commandant at that station, Captain Loytmore, had become peculiarly odious to the Inlians, and the continued imprisonment of the Depuies, above all, incensed them beyond endurance. From his moment, indeed, Occonostota was the fierce enemy of the Province; and he resolved, much as he despisd treachery, to avail himself of the first opportunity of revenge. With a strong party, he surrounded fort George, and kept the garrison confined; but inding that no impression could be made on the vorks, he resorted to stratagem.

He placed a party of savages in a dark thicket by he river-side, and then sent an Indian woman, whom e knew to be always welcome at the fort, to inform he Commander that he had something of consenuence to communicate and would be glad to speak with him near the water. Covernore imprudently consented, and without any suspicions of danger walkad down towards the river, accompanied by Lieuten-Occonostota, appearing ints Bell and Foster. apon the opposite side told him he was going to Charleston, to procure a release of the prisoners, and would be glad to have white men accompany him as a mfeguard. To cover his dark design he had a bridle in his hand, and added he would go and hunt for a horse. Covernore replied that he should have a guard, and wished he might find a horse, as the journey was Upon this, the Indian, turning about, very long. wung the bridle thrice round his head as a signal to the savages placed in ambush, who instantly fired on the officers, shot the Captain dead, and wounded his wo companions. Orders were given to put the hosbges in irons to prevent any further danger from bem, which, while the soldiers were attempting to execute, the Indians stabbed one and wounded two vore of them. The garrison then fell on the unfortunate hostages, and butchered all of them in a ner too shocking to relate.

There were few men in the Cherokee natio did not lose a friend or relative by this ma and therefore with one voice all immediately de for war. The leaders in every town seized the et: "the spirits of their murdered brothers we vering around them and calling out for vengea their enemies." Large parties of warriors to Burning with impatience to imbrue hands in the blood of their enemies, they 1 down among innocent and defenceless families frontiers of Carolina; and there men, women an dren, without distinction, fell a sacrifice to their ciless fury. Such as fled to the woods and ea the scalping-knife, perished with hunger; and whom they made prisoners were carried into the derness, where they suffered inexpressible hard Every day brought fresh accounts of their r and murders.

Great alarm prevailed throughout the Province corresponding efforts were made for defence. troops of rangers were raised to protect the from Application was made to Virginia and North (na for aid; as also to General Amherst, Conferior-Chief of the British forces in America immediately despatched twelve companies to that of hostilities. The various detachments med at Congarees in May, 1760, and the campaigan with a rapid invasion of the Cherokee ter Considerable ravages were speedily made, inc. the destruction of Estatoe and Keowee, (the of which contained two hundred houses,) an army then marched to relieve Fort George.

And now the war grew fervid. Saloueh and toe had sworn vengeance over the ashes of homes, and the soul of the Great-Warrior w within him. The invaders were suffered to their hazardous and difficult march, through thickets and deep defiles, and over mountains, and swamps, till they came within five miles of Etchoe. Here was a low valley, covered so thick with bushes that the soldiers could scarcely see three yards before them. The army was obliged to pass through it, and that in such a manner as to permit but few of the troops to act together. An officer was ordered to advance, and scour the thicket with a company of inngers. He obeyed, but a sudden discharge from i mseen fire-arms laid him dead on the spot, with sevral of his soldiers. The light-infantry and grena-' ders now charged their enemy,—a heavy fire comsenced on both sides,—and the woods around rang with the warrior's whoop, the shouts of the soldiery, and the cries of the dying. The action lasted more than an hour,—the English losing about twenty men killed and eighty wounded.—when the Indians slowly retreated and disappeared, carrying off the bodies of their slain. "Upon viewing the ground," (says our historian.) "all were astonished to see with what judgment they had chosen it. Scarcely could the most experienced officer have fixed upon a spot more advantageous for attacking an enemy." Orders were immediately given for an expeditious retreat.

Thus Occonnostota succeeded in the field. But his heart still thirsted for blood, and he found means to gratify his revenge in another quarter. Fort Loudon, (built, like Fort George, on the frontier,) with a garrison of twenty men, was surrounded by the enraged enemy, and reduced to the extremities of famine. Under these circumstances Captain Stuart, a gentleman well known to the Cherokees during a long official and private intercourse with them, obtained leave to go to Chotch, the town of the Great-Warrior,-who was sometimes called 'Prince of Chotch.' A capitulation The arms of the garrison was agreed upon with him. were surrendered on the faith of it; and they march ed out, on their way towards Fort George, under the excert of an Indian detachment headed by the Prince himself. Having gone fifteen miles, they encamped a night near an Indian town. All the escort left II.—0 them, but still they remained unmolested. At length, about day-break, a guard came running in with intelligence that the woods and bushes around them were full of hideously painted savages, who had already enclosed them. In a moment after, the enemy rushed upon them, and fired, and thirty of their number fell dead. The residue either fled or were captured; and the latter, including Stuart, were pinioned and sent back to Fort Loudon.

And now Attakullakulla came forward. He had taken no part in the war, on either side; but Stuart had been his best friend in former times, and he could not think of seeing him a prisoner and in peril of his life. He hastened to the fort, and purchased him of his Indian master, giving his rifle, clothes, and all he could command as a ransom; and then took him into his own family, and shared with him the provisions which his table afforded.

Occonostota, meanwhile, had formed the design of attacking Fort George, and sent messengers throughout the Cherokee country to collect his warriors for that purpose. At this juncture, a quantity of ammunition was found in Fort Loudon (where the English captives were still confined) which the garrison had buried before leaving it. The discovery had nearly cost Stuart his life, but his protector again rescued him. The Indians, indeed, found occasion for his services. At a great Council held at Choteh, whither he was carried, the warrior told him they had resolved to march against Fort George with a quantity of English cannon, to be managed by men under his (Stuart's) command, and they wished him previously to write letters for them to the Commandant, demanding a surrender. If he refused, they intended to burn his companions, one by one, before his face.

Captain Stuart was now really uneasy in his situation, and he determined from this moment to make his escape or perish in the attempt. He privately communicated his feelings to Attakullakulla, and appealed to his magnanimity. The old Warrior took him by the hand. "Be calm," said he, "be calm, my son; I am your friend—trust me." He went forward, and claimed the Englishman for his prisoner; and then gave out word among his countrymen, that he intended to 'go a-hunting,' for a few days, and to take his Englishman with him.

They set out together, accompanied by the warfior's wife, his brother, and two others. For provisions they depended on what they might kill by the way. The distance to the frontier settlements was great, and the utmost expedition necessary to prevent any surprise from Indians pursuing them. They travelled nine days and nights through a dreary wilderness, shaping their course for Virginia, by the light and guidance of the heavenly bodies. On the tenth they arrived at the banks of Holstein river; where they fortunately fell in with a party of three thousand men, sent out by Colonel Bird for the relief of such soldiers as might make their escape that way from Fort Loudon.

Here the Chieffain was content to relinquish his charge. He bade his friend farewell, and, as composedly as if the whole transaction were a matter of course, turned back into the wilderness, and retraced his long and wearisome journey.

Such was the issue of the first campaign. The spring of 1761 opened with new efforts on the part of Carolina. A new provincial regiment was raised; fresh reinforcements of regulars arrived from the north; and numbers of the Chickasaw and Catawba Indians were induced to give their assistance—so that, on the 27th of May, an army of two thousand six hundred men mustered at Fort George.

Latinac, a French officer, was at this time among the Cherokees, and he proved an indefatigable instigator to mischief. He persuaded them, that the English would be satisfied with nothing less than to exterminate them, man, woman, and child, from the face of the earth. He gave them arms, too, and urged them to war. At a grand meeting of the nation, he brandished his hatchet, and, striking it fu ously into a log of wood, cried out—"Who is the m that will take this up for the King of France? Who is he? Let him come forth!" Saloueh, the young Wirior of Estatoe, instantly leaped forward, laid hold it, and cried out—"I will take it up. I am for w The spirits of the slain call upon us; I will aven them; and who will not? he is no better than a w man that refuses to follow me." Many a fierce loc and many a lifted tomahawk answered the appeal the Orator, and again did the war-torrent rush down.

upon the frontiers.

The Great-Warrior too, more a general, and not ke a soldier, was again ready for his enemy. They cor menced their march into the interior on the 7th June, and advanced unmolested as far as the well i membered battle-ground of the year previous: b there, the Indian scouts in front observed a large bo of Cherokees posted upon a hill on the right flank the army. Immediately the savages, rushing dow began to fire on the advanced guard, which bein supported repulsed them; but they recovered the heights. Colonel Grant ordered a party to march t the hills, and drive the enemy from them. The e gagement became general, and was fought on bo sides with great bravery. The situation of the troo was in several respects deplorable—fatigued in a t dious march in rainy weather-surrounded wi woods so that they could not discern the enemygalled by the scattering fire of savages who who pressed always fell back, but rallied again and agai No sooner was any advantage gained over them one quarter than they appeared in another. Whi the attention of the Commander was occupied in dri ing the enemy from their lurking-place on the river side, his rear was attacked, and so vigorous an effe made for the flour and cattle, that he was obliged to o der a party back to the relief of the rear-guard. From eight o'clock in the morning until eleven, the savage continued to keep up an irregular and incessant fir sometimes from one place and sometimes from another, while the woods resounded with hideous war-whoops frequently repeated, but in different directions. 'At length the Cherokees gave way and were pursued.

Such is the account of this famous engagement given by history. The English lost between fifty and sixty killed and wounded. The loss of the Cherokees was uncertain, as that of an Indian army always they carried off the slain.

K.

5

Ľ-

ã.

Æ

•

•

£

.

>

And now commenced a scene of devastation scarcely parallelled in the annals of the continent. For thirty days, the English army employed themselves in burning and ravaging the country and settlements of the enemy. "Heaven has blest us," says a letterwriter from the camp, under date of July 10th, * " with the greatest success; we have finished our business as completely as the most sanguine of us could have wished. All their towns, fifteen in number, beside many little villages and scattered houses, have been burnt; upwards of fourteen hundred acres of corn, according to a moderate computation, entirely destroyed; and near five thousand Cherokees, men, women and children, driven to the mountains to starve -their only sustenance for some time past being horseflesh."#

The result of these measures was decisive. A great part of the Cherokee nation became desirous of procuring peace upon any terms; and the army had no sooner reached Fort George, than a deputation of about twenty chiefs visited the camp. Neither the Great-Warrior nor his staunch aid-de-camp, Saloueh, was among them; but the Man-Killer came, and the Raven, and Old Cesar of Hywassih, and at the head of all the Little Carpenter himself.

On the 28th of August they waited upon Colonel Grant, who had prepared a bower for their reception.

Having seated themselves in grave array, the Little-

Carpenter was asked, if he had come to sue for peace.

He answered in the affirmative. "Have you authority from the whole nation?" demanded the Colo to which all the chiefs replied that they would con whatever the Carpenter should agree to. The lithen delivered his talk.—

"You live at the water-side," said he, "and as light. We are in darkness; but hope all will ve clear. I have been constantly going about de good, and though I am tired, yet I am come to what can be done for my people, who are in great tress." Here he produced the strings of wampun had received from the different towns, denoting t earnest desire of peace, and added,-" As to what happened. I believe it has been ordered by our Fa We are of a different color from the w above. They are superior to us. But one Ga people. father of us all, and we hope what is past will be gotten. God Almighty made all people. not a day but some are coming into, and others g out of the world. The Great King told me the should never be crooked, but open for every or pass and repass. As we all live in one land. I l we shall all love as one people."

This account is taken partly from news-papers of period under consideration. Ramsay only adds. peace was formally ratified; and that the ancient fri ship of the parties being renewed, both expre their hope that it would last as long as the sun m shine and the rivers run. Some little difficulty pears to have occurred in the adjustment, which sh be mentioned to the credit of Little-Carpe He consented to every requisition excepting which demanded the surrender of four Cherol to be put to death in front of the camp. Thi would not promise. The Colonel gave him a de think of it, but he still refused. Finally, it thought advisable to refer him to the Governor, he undertook a journey to Charleston, several dred miles distant, for the express purpose of pr ring a mitigation of the treaty of peace in regain the single obnoxious provision.

His perseverence and firmness were rewarded as they deserved. "This day," says a Charleston paper of September 23d, "Attakullakulla had his last public audience, when he signed the treaty of peace, and received an authenticated copy under the great seal. "He earnestly requested that Captoin John Shart might be made Chief White-Man [Indian Agent] in their nation. He said, 'all the Indians love him; and there would never be any uneasiness if he were there.' This faithful Indian afterwards dined with his Honor the Governor, and tomerrow sets out for his own country. He has received several presents as a mark of the regard this government has for him."

Thus ended the Cherokee war. That its conduct did no discredit to the talents of the Great-Warrior. we need not argue. As to the principles upon which it was fought, we may content ourselves with the comment of an impartial historian. "In the review of the whole," says Ramsay, "there is much to blame, and more to regret. The Cherokees were the first aggressors by taking horses from the Virginians; but by killing them for that offence the balance of injury was on their side. Then treachery begat treachery, and marder produced murder. The lives of those men who came originally as messengers of peace, though afterwards retained as hostages, were barbarously mken away without any fault of theirs, other than their obeying the laws of nature in resisting a military order for putting their persons in irons. A deadly hatred and a desolating war was the consequence."

TARREST.

We do not meet with frequent mention of either of the Chieftains named in this chapter, after the campaign of 1761. They fought against the neighboring tribes occasionally, but with the English they preserved a firm peace of at least fifteen years. The character of the contest between England and the Colonies appears to have confused them, and their embarranement was not at all relieved by the unsparing efforts made to instigate them to hostilities against the latter. The result was a division of opinion, and a diversity of practice, as in the case of their Northern neighbors. A part of the nation took up arms for the English,—probably the younger warriors;—but the whole were compelled to suffer in consequence. A powerful army from South Carolina invaded their territory, and after a severe struggle, peace was once more enforced at the point of the bayonet.

It is doubtful whether the Great-Warrior was living at this period, for his name does not appear in the history of the conflict or the treaty. Little-Carpenter still survived, but, as usual, took no part in the war. Indeed he must now have been nearly disabled from very active service by his advanced age,—as well as disinclined for better reasons,—for he is believed to have been one of the seven Cherokees who visited England and were introduced to George II, as early as 1730. But this cannot be affirmed with certainty.

We shall close our imperfect sketch of this wise and worthy Chieftain, with the characteristic account of an interview with him, given by Bertram, author of the well-known Southern Travels. It occurred early in the Revolution :-

"Soon after crossing this large branch of the Tanase, [in Upper Georgia,] I observed, descending the heights at a distance, a company of seven Indians, all well mounted on horseback. They came rapidly On their nearer approach I observed a forward. Chief at the head of the caravan, and apprehending him to be the Little Carpenter, Emperor or Grand Chief of the Cherokees, as they came up I turned off from the path to make way, in token of respect. The compliment was accepted, and returned, for his Highness, with a gracious and cheerful smile, came up to me, and clapping his hand on his breast, offered it to me, saying, 'I am Attakullaculla,' and heartily shook hands with me, and asked me 'If I knew it.' I answered, that the Good Spirit who goes before me, spoke to me and said, 'That is the great Attakullaculla,' and added that I was of the tribe of the white men of Pennsylvania, who esteem themselves brothers and friends to the Red Men, but particularly to the Cherokees, and that the name of Attacullaculla was dear to his white brethren. After this compliment, which seemed to be acceptable, he inquired 'if I came lately from Charleston, and if John Stuart was well,' [the agent,] saying that he was going to see him. I replied that I had come lately from Charleston, on a friendly visit to the Cherokees; that I had seen the Superintendant, the Beloved Man, &c. The Great Chief was pleased to answer, that I was welcome in their country, as a friend and brother, and then shaking hands heartily he bade me farewell, and his retinue confirmed it by a united voice of assent."

ı.

ŭ

CHAPTER XI.

The Cayuga Chief, Logan—Some account of his father, SHIKELLINUS—Residence of Logan—His friendship for the whites interrupted by their provocations—His family misfortunes—The Shawanee SILVER-HEELS—Logan joins in a war of revenge against the Long-Knives'—Battle of the Kenhawa—Treaty of Peace with Governor Dunmore—Logan's celebrated speech—His history completed—BUCKONGAHELAS, the Delaware head War-Chief—His intercourse with the Christian Indians—Part which he takes in the Revolution—Defeated by Wayne, in 1794—Anecdotes of him—Death and character.

Few Indians names have been oftener repeated than that of Logan, and yet of scarcely any individual of his race is the history which has reached us less complete. He was a chief of the Six-Nations—a Cayuga—but resided during most of his life in a western settlement, either at Sandusky or upon a branch of the Scioto—there being at the former location, a few years before the Revolution, about three hundred warriors, and about sixty at the latter.

Logan was the second son of Shikellimus; and a this is the same person whom Heckewelder describes as "a respectable chief of the Six Nations, who resided at Shamokin (Pennsylvania,) as an agent, to transact business between them and the Government of the State." In 1747, at a time when the Moravian Missionaries were the object of much groundless hatred and accusation, Shikellimus invited some of them to settle at Shamokin, and they did so. When Count Zinzendorff and Conrad Weiser visited that place, several years before, they were very hospitably entertained by the Chief, who came out to meet them (says Loskiel,) with a large fine melon, for which the Count politely gave him his fire cap in exchange; and thus commenced an intimate acquaintance. He was a shrewd and sober man,—not addicted to drinking, like most of his countrymen, because 'he never wished to become a fool.' Indeed, he built his house on pillars for security against the drunken Indians, and used to ensconce himself within it on all occasions of riot and outrage. He died in 1749, attended in his last moments by the good Moravian Bishop Zeisberger, in whose presence, says Loskiel, 'he fell happily asleep in the Lord.'

Logan inherited the talents of his father, but not his prosperity. Nor was this altogether his own fault. He took no part except that of peace-making in the French and English war of 1760, and was ever before and afterwards looked upon as emphatically the friend of the white man. But never was kindness rewarded like his.

In the spring of 1774, a robbery and murder occurred in some of the white settlements on the Ohio, which were charged to the Indians, though perhaps not justly, for it is well known that a large number of civilized adventurers were traversing the frontiers at this time, who sometimes disguised themselves as Indians, and who thought little more of killing one of that people than of shooting a buffalo. A party of these men, land-jobbers and others, undertook to punish the outrage in this case, according to their custom, as Mr. Jefferson expresses it, in a summary way.*

Colonel Cresap, a man infamous for the many murders he had committed on those much injured people, collected a party, and proceeded down the Kenhawa in quest of vengeance. Unfortunately, a canoe of women and children, with one man only, was seen coming from the opposite shore, unarmed, and not at all suspecting an attack from the whites. Cresap and his party concealed themselves on the bank of the river, and the moment the canoe reached the shore, singled out their objects, and, at one fire, killed every person in it. This happened to be the family of Logan.*

* Notes on Virginia.

It was not long after this that another massacra took place, under still more aggravated circumstances not far from the present site of Wheeling, Virginia,— a considerable party of the Indians being decoyed by the whites, and all murdered, with the exception of a little girl. Among these, too, was both a brother of Logan, and a sister, and the delicate situation of the latter increased a thousand fold both the barbarity of the crime and the rage of the survivors of the family.

The vengeance of the Chieftain was indeed provoked beyond endurance; and he accordingly distinguished himself by his daring and bloody exploits in the war which now ensued, between the Virginians on the one side, and a combination mainly of Shawanees, Mingoes and Delawares on the other. The former of these tribes were particularly exasperated by the unprovoked murder of one of their favorite chiefs, SILVER-HELLS who had in the kindest manner undertaken to escor several white traders across the woods from the Ohic to Albany, a distance of nearly two hundred miles.

The civilized party prevailed, as usual. A decisive battle was fought upon the 10th of October, of the year last named, on Point Pleasant at the mouth of the Great Kenhawa in West-Virginia, between the Confederates commanded by Logan, and one thousand Virginian riflemen constituting the left wing of an army led by Governor Dunmore against the Indians of the North-West This engagement has by some annalists,—who however have rarely given the particulars of it—been called the most obstinate ever contested with the natives, and we therefore annex an official account of it which has fortunately been brought to light within a few years

"Monday morning, [the 10th,] about half an hour before sun-rise, two of Capt. Russell's company discovered a large party of Indians about a mile from camp; one of which was shot down by the Indians

* Jefferson.

† Heckewelder's History.

'he other made his escape and brought in the intellince; two or three minutes after, two of Capt. Shelr's men came in and confirmed the account.

Col. Andrew Lewis being informed thereof, immeately ordered out Col. Charles Lewis to take the mmand of one hundred and fifty men, of the Auasta troops; and with him went Capt. Dickinson. apt. Harrison, Capt. Wilson, Capt. John Lewis of ugusta, and Capt. Lockridge, which made the first vision; Col. Fleming was ordered to take comand of one hundred and fifty more, consisting of otetrout, Bedford and Fincastle troops-viz: Capt. ufort of Bedford, Capt. Love of Botetrout, and apt. Shelby and Capt. Russell of Fincastle, which ade the second division. Col. Charles Lewis's dision marched to the right some distance from the hio; Col. Fleming, with his division, up the bank f the Ohio, to the left. Col. Lewis's division had not arched quite half a mile from camp, when about in-rise, an attack was made on the front of his divisn, in a most vigorous manner, by the united tribes f Indians, Shawances, Delawares, Mingoes, Iaways, ad of several other nations, in number not less than ght hundred, and by many thought to be a thou-In this heavy attack Col. Lewis received a ound which in a few hours occasioned his death, id several of his men fell on the spot; in fact the ugusta division was forced to give way to the heavy e of the enemy. In about a minute after the atck on Col. Lewis's division, the enemy engaged e front of Col. Fleming's division, on the Ohio; id in a short time the Colonel received two balls rough his left arm, and one through his breast, and ter animating the officers and soldiers, in a spirited anner, to the pursuit of victory, retired to camp.

The loss of the brave Colonels from the field was nsibly felt by the officers in particular; but the Austa troops being shortly after reinforced from mp by Col. Field, with his company, together with apt. M'Dowel, Capt. Mathews and Capt. Stuart, from Augusta, and Capt. Arbuckle and Capt. M'Clei ahan, from Botetrout, the enemy, no longer able maintain their ground, was forced to give way t they were in a line with the troops of Col. Flemin left in action on the bank of Ohio. In this precir tate retreat Col. Field was killed. Capt. Shelby w then ordered to take the command. During this tim it being now twelve o'clock, the action continue extremely hot. The close underwood, and mar steep banks and logs, greatly favored their retres and the bravest of their men made the best use them, whilst others were throwing their dead in the Ohio and carrying off their wounded.

II-P

After twelve o'clock the action, in a small degre abated; but continued, except at short intervals, share enough till after one o'clock. Their long retreat gav them a most advantageous spot of ground, fro whence it appeared to the officers so difficult to di lodge them that it was thought most advisable to star as the line was then formed, which was about a mi and a quarter in length, and had till then sustained constant and equal weight of the action, from wing wing. It was till about half an hour of sunset the continued firing on us scattering shots, which we r turned to their disadvantage; at length night comin on, they found a safe retreat. They had not the se isfaction of carrying off any of our men's scalps, sa one or two stragglers, whom they killed before the engagement. Many of their dead they scalped rat er than we should have them; but our troops scalp upwards of twenty of those who were first kille It is beyond a doubt their loss in number far exceed ours, which is considerable."*

The Virginians lost in this action two of their C lonels, four Captains, many subordinate officers at about fifty privates killed, besides a much larger nur ber wounded. The Governor himself was not e gaged in the battle, being at the head of the right wil

* Niles's Register, Vol. XII.

same army, a force of fifteen hundred men, vere at this time on their expedition against the of some of the hostile tribes in the North-West. as at the treaty ensuing upon this battle that llowing speech was delivered,—sufficient to rene name of Logan famous for many a century. ne by the hand of a messenger, sent, (as Mr. son states,) that the sincerity of the negotiation not be distrusted on account of the absence of tinguished a warrior as himself.

appeal to any white man to say, if he ever en-Logan's cabin hungry, and he gave him not if he ever came cold and naked, and he clothnot. During the course of the last long and y war, Logan remained idle in his cabin, an adfor peace. Such was my love for the whites, ny countrymen pointed as they passed, and said, in is the friend of white men.' I had even ht to have lived with you, but for the injuries of an. Colonel Cresap, the last spring, in cold and unprovoked, murdered all the relations gan, not sparing even my women and chil-There runs not a drop of my blood in the veins living creature. This called on me for revenge.

d my vengeance. For my country, I rejoice at eams of peace. But do not harbor a thought nine is the joy of fear. Logan never felt fear. ill not turn on his heel to save his life. Who re to mourn for Logan?—Not one."

3 sought it: I have killed many: I have fully this powerful address, Mr. Jefferson says, "I challenge the whole orations of Demosthenes icero, and of any more eminent orator, if Europe irnished more eminent, to produce a single passuperior to the speech of Logan"; and an Amerataesman and scholar, scarcely less illustrious the author of this noble eulogium, has expressed adiness to subscribe to it." It is of course unsary for any humbler authority to enlarge upon its merits. Indeed, they require no exposition: they strike home to the soul.

* Clinton's Historical Discourse: 1811.

The melancholy history of Logan must be dismissed with no relief to its gloomy colors. He was himself a victim to the same ferocious cruelty which had already rendered him a desolate man.* Not long after the treaty a party of whites murdered him, as he was returning from Detroit to his own country. It grieves us to add, that towards the close of his life, misery had made him intemperate. No security and no solace to Logan, was the orator's genius or the warrior's glory.

Campbell, in his Gertrude of Wyoming, has appropriated the affecting sentiment of Logan to an Indian hero of his own, but the sin of the transfer may be excused for its skill.

e excused for the swill.

"He left of all my tribe
Nor man nor child, nor thing of living birth:
No! not the dog, that watched my household hearth,
Escaped, that night of blood, upon our plains!
All perished! I alone am left on Earth!
To whom nor relative nor blood remains,
No!—not a kindred drop that runs in human veins!

A more noted personage in his own time than even Logan, was the Delaware Buckongahelas, who rose from the station of a private warrior to be, as Heckewelder calls him, the head war-chief of his nation. That writer speaks of meeting him at Tuscaroras as early as 1762: and the Chieftain accordingly reminded him of the fact when, in 1781, he visited the settlement of the Christian Indians in Ohio. His deportment on that occasion was singularly characteristic of the man; for all writers agree in representing him as fearless, frank and magnanimous. It should be premised, that he lived on the Miami, and being rather in the British interest, was disposed to watch quite closely the movements of the peace-party. What he did, er, he did openly, and he never hesitated to eximself with the same freedom.

* Drake's Biography.

morning, late in the season last named, two an Indians of Gnadenhutten having gone out in the woods for strayed horses, were met by bain at the head of eighty warriors, who without any made them both captives. "Then," says welder, "taking a course through the woods, unhad come within a short distance of Gnadenhut-sy rested until nearly break of day, guarding the en, that they might not escape and give informathem. The day approaching, they moved on, wing surrounded the town completely, hailed labitants, to deliver into their hands the chief, EMEND, (Kill-Buck) with the other chiefs and llors: whom they must have either alive or

The party being informed, that not one of hey were in search of, was here at the time, but I gone to Pittsburg some time past, they then ed every house, stable and cellar; and being satisfied that they had been told the truth, they ded that deputies, consisting of the principal f the three towns, should be called together, to what they had to say to them. The principal assembled from Salem and Shonbrun; and ngahelas, for such they discovered him to be, sed them as follows:

ends!—Listen to what I say to you! You see t and powerful nation divided! You see the fighting against the son, and the son against the —The father has called on his Indian children, t him in punishing his children, the Americans, eir object was, to take these off to a place where ould have them under their control, and prevent om governing the nation while the war lasted; it a custom with the Indians, that as soon rece-chief has gave his consent to war measurer, his eases, and the power is vested in the head capthe of the nation, until his services, in making pea in wanted.

who have become refractory !- I took time to consider what I should do-whether or not I should receive the hatchet of my father, to assist him!-At first I looked upon it as a family quarrel, in which I was not interested -However, at length it appeared to me. that the father was in the right; and his children deserved to be punished a little!—That this must be the case, I concluded from the many cruel acts his offspring had committed from time to time, on his Indian children; in encroaching on their land, stealing their property, shooting at, and murdering without cause, men, women and children-Yes! even murdering those, who at all times had been friendly to them, and were placed for protection under the roof of their father's house—The father himself standing centry at the door, at the time."

The writer here referred to a number of Pennsylvanian Indians, murdered in a jail, where they were placed for security against the whites. The sentry was the jailer. He continued thus:

"Friends! Often has the father been obliged to settle, and make amends for the wrongs and mischiefs done to us, by his refractory children, yet these do not grow better! No! they remain the same, and will continue to be so, as long as we have any land left us! Look back at the murders committed by the Long-Knives on many of our relations, who lived peaceable neighbors to them on the Ohio! Did they not kill them without the least provocation?—Are they, do you think, better now than they were then?-No, indeed not; and many days are not elapsed since you had a number of these very men at your doors, who panted to kill you, but fortunately were prevented from so doing by the Great Sun,* who, at that time, had been ordained by the Great Spirit to protect vou!"

* The name the Indians had given to Col. Daniel Broadhead.

ends and relatives!—Now listen to me, and hear have to say to you.—I am myself come to bid and go with me to a secure place! Do not, ends, covet the land you now hold under culti-

I will conduct you to a country* equally vhere your fields shall yield you abundant and where your cattle shall find sufficient pasthere there is plenty of game; where your and children, together with yourselves, will, seace and safety; where no Long Knife shall plest you!—Nay! I will live between you and nd not even suffer them to frighten you!you can worship your God without fear! here you are, you cannot do this!—Think on have now said to you, and believe, that if you iere you now are, one day or another the inives will, in their usual way, speak fine o you, and at the same time murder you!" is speech the Brethren replied by civilly dethe proposition of the Orator; and he then ofnew one,-that they should permit all who to leave them, to do so. Thus the matter was Buckongahelas then proceeded to another of the Christian Delawares, Salem, before envhich place he cautioned his warriors to leave ms behind them, "lest the women and chilould be frightened." "And destroy nothing," d, "which belongs to our friends; no, not even their chickens." The conference which enth the Salem authorities is thus stated by Mr. velder, who was present.

or cherr, who was present.

• Christian Indians," said the Chieftain, "were

• people; and he would never trouble them on

• of their not joining in the war.—Indeed, they not with propriety join in wars, without first eing praying, [meaning christianity].—And ev ian, or body of Indians, had a right to choose nselves, whom they would serve!—For him,

* The Miami country.

he had hired himself to his father, the land, for the purpose of fighting against children, the Long-Knives; whilst his: lations, the Christian Indians, had hire to the Great Spirit, solely for the purpose prayers!" [meaning, attending to religior that both were right in their way, thou ployments could not be connected to only yesterday they were told, whilst a ten, that God had instructed all Christ love their enemies—and even to pray These words, he said, were written in 1 that contained the words and command: -Now, how would it appear, were our friends, who love and pray for their fight against them !-- compel them to a what they believe to be right!—force the by which they would incur the displ Great Spirit, and bring his wrath upon the would be as wrong in him to compel the dians to quit praying and turn out to people, as it would be in them to comp fighting aside, and turn to praying only ten heard it stated, that the believing slaves to their teachers, and what these them to do, they must do, however di them!-Now, (said he) how can this I every Indian is a free man, and can pleases!—Can the teacher stop him from -No! he cannot!-well! how can he t a slave by the teacher!—When we com our friends, we see how much they love ers.—This looks well !—Continue, my fr to the national assistants) in loving your in doing all good things; and when yo relations come to see you, satisfy the you have done to us this day !"*

Having taken leave of all who were

* Narrative of the Christian Indi

he proceeded to the middle of the street, from whence he addressed the inhabitants of the place and thanked them for their hospitality, assuring them of his regard and good wishes for them, and adding, that "If at any time they should hear it said, that Pachgantschibilas was an enemy to the believing [Christian] Indians;

they should consider such words as lies!"

The reasoning of the Chieftain speaks for itself. His predictions in regard to the fate of the Christian Delawares, were but too speedily accomplished. But it was no fault of his; and indeed, in 1783, when Captain Pipe sent word to him not to suffer any of them to leave his territory, he returned answer, with his usual spirit, that he never would prevent them from going to their teachers. "And why did you expect them?" he added. "Did I not tell you beforehand, that if you drove the teachers off, the believing Indians would follow them? But you would not listen to me, and now we lose both! Who, think you, is the cause of all the disasters, which have befallen these people! I say you!—You! who threatened them with destruction! You, who instigated the Wyandots to act the treacherous part they did,—agreeing with them, that, as a recompense for their services, they should be entitled to all the plunder they could hold of!"

In Dawson's Memoirs of Harrison, Buckongahelas mentioned as being present at a council of the chiefs of various tribes, called at Fort Wayne in 1803, for the purpose of ratifying a negotiation for land, already proposed in a former one which met at Vincennes. The Governor carried his point, chiefly by the aid of an influential Miami chief, and by being boldly seconded in every proposition by the Pottawatanies, who (as Mr. Dawson states,) "were entirely devoted to the Governor." It is not our intention here to discuss the length the character of this transaction, which rather belongs to the general history of the period. How the Delaware Chief and the Shawanees understood it, and how they expressed their sentiments, may be inferred from the following statement of Dawson:-

'n

3

•

3

7

ž

D

"When the transaction at the council of Vincennes was mentioned, it called forth all the wrath of the Delawares and the Shawanese. The respected Buckingehelos so far forgot himself that he interrupted the Governor, and declared with vehemence, that nothing that was done at Vincennes was binding upon the Indians; that the land which was there decided to be the property of the United States, belonged to the Delawares: and that he had then with him a chief who had been present at the transfer made by the Piankishaws to the Delawares of all the country between the Ohio and White rivers, more than thirty vears before. The Shawanese went still further, and behaved with so much insolence, that the Governor was obliged to tell them that they were undutiful and rebellious children, and that he would withdraw his protection from them until they had learnt to behave themselves with more propriety. These Chiefs immediately left the council house in a body." Subsequently the Shawanees submitted, though it does not appear that Buckongahelas set them the example: and thus, says the historian, the Governor overcame all opposition, and carried his point. 3.1

But he did not gain the good will, or subdue the haughty independence of the War-Chief of the Delawares, who, as long as he lived, was at least consistent with himself in his feelings towards the American people. Nor yet was he in the slightest degree servile in his attachment to the British. He was not their instrument or subject, but their ally; and no longer their ally, than they treated him in a manner suitable to that capacity and to his own character.

He was indeed the most distinguished warrior in the Indian confederacy, and as it was the British interest which had induced the Indians to commence, as well as to continue the war, Buckongahelas relied on their support and protection. This support had been given, so far as relates to provisions, arms, and ammuni; and in the celebrated engagement, on the 20th ugust, 1794, which resulted in a complete victory ieneral Wayne over the combined hostile tribes, were said to be two companies of British milirom Detroit on the side of the Indians.* But rates of Fort Mimms being shut against the reing and wounded Indians, after the battle, opened yes of Buckongahelas, and he determined upon an rediate peace with the United States, and a total idonment of the British. He assembled his tribe embarked them in canoes, with the design of seeding up the river, and sending a flag of truce to Wayne. Upon approaching the British fort, he requested to land, and he did so: "What have to say to me?" said he, addressing the officer of day. It was replied, that the commanding officer ned to speak with him. "Then he may come " was the reply. "He will not do that," said the er. "and you will not be suffered to pass the fort ou do not comply." "What shall prevent me?" the intrepid Chief. "These," said the officer, sting to the cannon of the fort. "I fear not your non," replied the Chief. "After suffering the ericans to defile your spring, without daring to fire hem, you cannot expect to frighten Buckongahe-"and he ordered the canoes to push off, and passed fort.

lever after this would he, like the other chiefs, the British, or receive presents from them. "Had great Buckingehelos lived," says Mr. Dawson, alng to these circumstances, "he would not have ered the schemes projected by the Prophet (brothof Tecumseh) to be matured." And the same ter states, that on his death-bed he earnestly advised his tribe to rely on the friendship of t States, and desert the cause of the British. in 1804.

Dawson's Memoirs.

This was spoken metaphorically, to express the conpt and insult with which the garrison had been treatby the Americans, for their treachery towards the Inps who had been their allies.

It is said of Buckongahelas, that no Chris ever was more scrupulous in performing all l ments. Indeed he had all the qualifications hero. His perfect Indian independence,pendence of a noble nature, unperceived to unaffected to others,-is illustrated by an anecdote which will bear repetition.

In the year 1785, he was present, with m chiefs of various tribes, at a treaty negotiate of Congress at Fort Mc'Intosh on the C When the peace-chiefs had addressed the sioners of the United States, who were Geor Clark, Arthur Lee, and Richard Butler, the of whom he did not deign to notice, approac eral Clark and taking him by the hand, he dressed him: "I thank the Great Spirit f this day brought together two such great v Buckongahelas and General Clark."* The reminds one of the Little-Carpenter's addr Bartram :- "I am Attakullakulla ;-did you

* Dawson's Memoirs.

CHAPTER XII.

Agents.—Concert traced between them...Witchcards.

Agents.—Concert traced between them...Witchcards.

Bome scount of the Shawanees, the tribe of Tecumsen.—Hardy history and lineage of Tecumseh.—His first adventures as a warrior.—His habits and principles.—His brothers Kumshaka and Elskwatawa.—The first open movements of the latter, in 1806.—He assumes the character of Prophet.—His doctrines.—His mode of operation upon his countrymen.—Other Indian Pretenders.—Anecdote of a Shawanee Chief, at Fort Wayne.—Tanner's account of the ministry of the Elskwátawa's Agents.—Concert traced between them.—Witchcaftsuperstition.—Anecdotes of Teteboxti The Crane, Leather-Lifs, and others.

As the distinguished personage whose history now claims our attention, was a member of the Kishopoke tribe of the Shawanee nation, a brief account of that somewhat celebrated community may not be irrelevant in this connection.

As their name indicates, they came originally from the South, (that being the meaning of the Delaware word Shancaneu;) and the oldest individuals of the Mohican tribe, their elder brother,* told Mr. Heckewalder, they dwelt in the neighborhood of Savannah, in Georgia, and in the Floridas. "They were a restless people," we are further informed, "delighting in wars;" and in these they were so constantly engaged, that their neighbors,—the Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, Yamassees, and other powerful tribes,—finally formed a league, offensive and defensive, for the express purpose of expelling them from the country. But the Shawanees were too wise to contend with such an enemy, and they adopted the more prudent policy of asking permission to leave their territories peaceably, and migrate northward. This favor being granted them, their main body settled upos the Ohio; some of them as far up as where the French afterwards built Fort Duquesne,—now Pittsburg,—others, about the forks of the Delaware, and a few even upon the site of what is now Philadelphia.

*So called, because their separation from the parent stock was one of the most ancient of which the tradition was distinctly preserved. Following the same principle, the Delawares themselves have uniformly given the title of Uncle to the Wyandots.

Those who remained on the Ohio becoming numerous and powerful, it was not long before they crossed the Alleghany mountains, and fell upon a settlement of the Delawares, on the Juniata, -of which very people, their grandfather, they had solicited peace and protection, through the interposition of the Mohicans, on their first arrival in the country. Murders were committed, plunder was carried off, and a war ensued. As soon as this could be disposed of, they engaged in the French war, which broke out in 1755, against the English. That being terminated in 1763, and the tribe being elated by its increased numbers, and by the strong confederacy now established between themselves and the Delawares. they commenced hostilities against the Cherokees. In the course of this war, the latter occasionally pursued the aggressors into the Delaware territories, and thus that nation was aroused again. The union of forces which ensued, added to the already existing hostility of the Five Nations, proved too much for the Cherokees, and in 1768, they solicited and obtained a peace. Owing chiefly to the influence of the Delawares, the Shawanees were now kept quiet for the unusually long term of six years, when they were involved in a war with the people of Virginia,—then comprising Kentucky, -occasioned by the noted murders committed upon Logan's relations and others, by white people. The burning of some of their villages had scarcely driven them to a sort of truce with this new enemy, when the war of the Revolution coml, in which they allied themselves with the l, and continued openly hostile, notwithstand-peace of 1783, until the famous victory of l Wayne, in 1795.

 reputation as warriors suffered nothing durhis long series of hostile operations. The first of Kentucky were molested and harassed by nore than by any other tribe. Boone, who en captive by them in 1778, saw four hundred y of their warriors mustered at one place, ed Chilicothe,—ready for a foray among the ettlements, which soon after ensued. Marhis History of Kentucky, gives the particun expedition against them, the season after which "many of the best men in the country ivates;" the invaders were defeated and drivand nearly two hundred of them pursued with rable loss, by about thirty of the Shawanees. the Indians who had been marauding in the ," the same writer observes elsewhere, "the ees had been the most mischievous, as they ne most active." Loskiel represents the tribe tion as "the most savage of the Indian naicident, showing the disposition which they ted, even at this period, (1773,) towards their an neighbors, may throw some light upon aracter, and upon subsequent events. ed missionary, Zeisberger, visited some of tlements, during the year last named, in the establishing a mission among them. At one villages, he met with the head-chief of the The latter gave him his hand and addressed This day," said he, "the Great Spirit has orhat we should see and speak with each other. face." He then entered into a long detail of ctices of the white people, describing their of deceiving the Indians, and finally affirmthey were all alike,—all hypocrites and knaves, ssionary made some reply to these charges, but the Chief was "so exceedingly exaspers the white people," adds Loskiel, "that bro berger" exhortation seemed to have little whim." He at length gave the Preacher per visit the other Shawanes towns, taking on gest, as a parting word of comfort, that he upon having his brains beat out very speedity years previous to this, when Count Zi himself went among the Wyoming Shaw convert them, they rewarded that pious p his labor of love, by conspiring to murder by a fortunate accident, he escaped safe i hands.

h

On the whole, setting saids for the press tory of this nation for the last thirty year which we have suffered most from them seem that a more warlike or more hostile : scarcely existed upon the continent. Whe than here, should we look for the birth and of Tecunses,* the modern Philip, and wi than at the stormy period of the Revolution ably, at the very time when the troops of gress (in 1780,) were expelling them westy the river Scioto, and burning their villag them, the young hero, who afterwards ki flame of war upon the entire frontier of the the breath of his own single spirit, was lee first lessons of vengeance amid the ruins of land, and in the blood of his countrymen.

His native land, we say, for it is tolerably certained that he was born on the banks of to, near Chilicothe. His father, who we Shawanee warrior, fell at the battle of while Tecumseh was yet a mere boy. His said by some to have been a Shawanee, at ers a Creek; but he is understood himself to a gentleman at Vincennes, in 1810, that kee, who had been taken prisoner in a war bethat nation and the Shawanees, and adopted, ling to Indian custom, into a family of the lation which resided near the Miami of the Lake. ccount is confirmed by the circumstance of oman having migrated into the Cherokee terriadvanced age, and died there. The totem of be is said to have been a turtle, and that of the s a tiger.

*Pronounced by the Indians Tecumité, :

m all the information which can now be gathespecting the early years of Tecumseh, it apthat he gave striking evidence in his hoyhood singular spirit which characterized him through He was distinguished for a steady adherence to ple, and generally to that of the best kind. He himself upon his temperance and his truth, aining an uncommon reputation for integrity, that is still rarer among his countrymen, never ing in the excessive use of food or liquor. He not marry until long after the customary perind then, as a matter of necessity, in consequence solicitations of friends, he connected himself in elderly female, who was, perhaps, not the omest or most agreeable lady in the world, but heless bore him one child, his only offspring. this exception, he adopted in his matrimonial he practices of the sect of Shakers, whose oles, as is well known, were afterwards so strenupromulgated by his brother, the Prophet, that a 1 prime functionary in that denomination gave ne credit of being as good a disciple as himself.* her there was an express concert or actual cotion between the two, at this early period, reng this or any other project or policy in which ubsequently engaged together, does not appear positively ascertained.

is not to be supposed, that any remarkable

e an authority cited at large in the following pa-achievements of the young warrior in his first be should be preserved on record. Some Shaw have said that he made his debut in an engagement the Kentucky troops, which took place on the l of Mad River; that in the heat of the skirmish he ungallantly turned right-about-face, and made the of his way from the field, with all possible diligen and that too while one of his brothers stood ground with the other Indians, and fought till he wounded and carried off. It must be adm this was not so creditable a proceeding as m conceived; but the extreme youth of the party some way to explain, as his subsequent conduc to excuse it.

But from this time, whatever might be his as courage, he was never known to shrink. previously to the treaty of Greenville, (in 1795) he was probably about twenty-five years of age, said to have signalized himself so much, as to been reputed one of the boldest of the Indian v ors. No individual was more regularly engage those terrible incursions by which the first se of Kentucky were so much harassed; and few boast of having intercepted so many boats of Ohio river, or plundered so many houses on the ilized shore. He was sometimes pursued, but i overtaken. If the enemy advanced into his country, he retreated to the banks of the Wa until the storm had passed by; and then, just as were laying aside the sword for the axe and plo share, swooped down upon them again in their settlements. It goes to show the disinterested g osity always ascribed to him, that, although booty collected in the course of these adven must have been very considerable in quantity value, he rarely retained any portion of it for his His ruling passion was the love of glor that of his followers was the love of gain; and course, a compromise could always be effected tween them, to the perfect satisfaction of both ties. He was a feudal baron among boors. It remained for subsequent occasions, then little dreamed of, to show that his temperament, like his talent, was even better adapted to the management of a large engagement, than to the melée of a small one.

We have now arrived at an epoch in his life, when it is no longer possible to give his own history to much advantage, but by connecting it with that of his celebrated brother, the Prophet already mentioned. The name of this personage was ELSKWATAWA.* He and Tecumseh, and still another, Kumssaka, were the offspring of the same mother at the same birth. Probably there was an understanding between the three, at an early date, respecting the great plans which the prophet and the orator afterwards carried into execution; but as we hear little or nothing of the subsequent co-operation of Kumshaka, it may be presumed that he did not live,—employment would certainly have been found for him, if he had.

It is said to have been about the year 1804, when the two brothers, who afterwards acted so prominently together, first conceived the project of uniting all the western Indians in a defensive and perhaps belligerent combination against the Americans. The probable inducements in their minds to the adoption of that policy, being rather a matter of speculation than history, will be left for subsequent comment. The course actually taken to effect the proposed object admits of little controversy. Elskátawa summarily undertook to personate a religious character, and began preaching in the summer of 1804.

He inculcated, in the first place, that a radical reform was necessary in the manners of the red people. This was proved, by enlarging upon the evils which had ensued from the neighborhood of the whites,the imitation of their dress and manners, the introduction of ardent spirits, diseases, contentions, and wars: by the vast diminution of the means of subsistence, and the narrowed limits of territory to which they were now hemmed in; and by other considerations of the most irritating, as well as plausible kind, the force of which was not at all lessened by occasional comment on particular transactions, and glowing references to the long, peaceful, and happy lives of their forefathers. That point being gained, and a favorable excitement produced, the next thing in order was his own commission from the Great Spirit. This was authenticated by the astonishing miracles he was able to perform, and still more by the great benefits he proposed to confer on his followers.

* Meaning, says Mr. Schoolcraft, a fire that is moved from place to place. Elsewhere we find him called Olliwayshila, on good authority. A compromise may be effected, by suggesting that he assumed various names at various periods.

The budget of reform was then brought forward. There was to be no more fighting between the tribes, -they were brethren. They were to abandon the use of ardent spirits, and to wear skins, as their ancestors had done, instead of blankets. Stealing, quarrelling, and other immoral modern habits were denounced. Injunctions of minor importance seem to have been enforced merely with a view to test the pliability of savage superstition, to embarrass the jealous scrutiny of those who opposed or doubted, and to establish a superficial uniformity whereby the true believers should be readily distinguished. The policy of the more prominent tenets cannot be mistaken. Just in proportion to their observance, they must inevitably promote the independence of the Indian nations, first, by diminishing their dependence upon the whites, and, secondly, by increasing their intercourse and harmony with each other.

In addressing himself to such subjects, with such a system, Elskwatawa could hardly fail of success. For some years, indeed, his converts were few; for, great as the influence is which a man of his pretentions exercises over his ignorant countrymen, when his reputation is once fairly acquired, it is by no means so easy an undertaking to establish it in the outset.

The means used by Elskwatawa, or by him and Tecumseh in concert, to effect the object in his own case, are more indicative of the talent of both, than the conception of the policy itself, which was comparatively common-place. A prophet is a familiar character among the Indians, and always has been. "The American impostors," said Charlevoix, "are not behind-hand with any in this point; and as by chance (if we will not allow the devil any share in it.) they sometimes happen to divine or guess pretty right, they acquire by this a great reputation, and are reckoned genii of the first order." Mr. Tanner, who has recently published a narrative of his thirty years' residence among the Indians, gives incidental accounts of as many as three or four pretenders, who, indeed, judging from the time of their appearance, may fairly be considered as emissaries of Elskwatawa and Tecumseh. The former had an immediate predecessor among the Delawares, a notorious preacher named Wangomend,* who began his career in 1766. This man wholly failed, as did most of the others; and the result is so common in similar cases, that it becomes the more interesting to ascertain how the inspired candidate now under consideration succeeded.

Tecumseh was, of course, his first convert and most devoted disciple, but some of their relatives or particular friends soon followed in his train. The wary intriguant then most wisely commenced operations upon the residue of his own tribe. Previous to any violent promulgation of the doctrines already stated, he gained their attention and flattered their pride, by reviving a favorite tradition which made them the most ancient and respectable people on the globe. The particulars cannot be better understood than from the representation of an old Shawanee Chief, who, in 1803, harangued a council at Fort Wayne upon the subject.

* Or WINGEMUND; the same man mentioned in the life of White-Eyes, as having protected Mr. Heckewelder on his journey through the woods

"The Master of Life," said he, very proudly, "who was himself an Indian, made the Shawaneese before any others of the human race, and they sprang from his brain." He added, that the Master of Life "gave them all the knowledge which he himself possessed; that he placed them upon the great island; and that all the other red people were descended from the Shawaneese:—that after he had made the Shawaneese, he made the French and English out of his breast, and the Dutch out of his feet; and for your Long-Knives kind," said he, addressing himself to the Governor, "he made them out of his hands. All these inferior races of men he made white, and placed them beyond the great lake,"-meaning the Atlantic Ocean.

"The Shawaneese for many ages continued to be masters of the continent, using the knowledge which they had received from the Great Spirit, in such a manner as to be pleasing to him, and to secure their own happiness. In a great length of time, however they became corrupt, and the Master of Life to them he would take away from them the know edge they possessed, and give it to the white peop to be restored when, by a return to good princip they would deserve it. Many years after that, saw something white approaching their shores first they took it for a great bird, but they soon f it to be a monstrous canoe, filled with the very p who had got the knowledge which belonged t Shawaneese. After these white people landed were not content with having the knowledge belonged to the Shawaneese, but they usurpe lands also. They pretended, indeed, to have chased these lands; but the very goods which gave for them was more the property of the than the white people, because the knowleds ed them to manufacture these goods actually red to the Shawaneese. But these things will nave an end. The Master of Life is about to reto the Shawaneese both their knowledge and ights, and he will trample the Long-Knives uns feet."

s speaker was supposed to be in the British inand to have been sent to Fort Wayne for the se of preventing a negotiation expected to be settled. The probability is, that he derived his of Shawanee dignity from the preaching of zatawa. But the latter had more good sense personally to continue the same strain, after havcured about one hundred followers by the use It was then abandoned, and other inducements rguments brought forward, of a wider applica-Some of the Shawanees grew cool and desertn, but he still persevered. His brother was inrable in his cooperation; other agents and inents were set to work; and stragglers of various soon flocked to his quarters at Greenville from direction.

minutiæ of this proselyting or electioneering are so well developed in the faithful and simrrative of Tanner, as to justify extracting his nt at length. It cannot fail to give a much r idea of the mode of operation, than any expowhatever in general terms. The locality, it s observed, is a quite remote one:—

was while I was living here at Great Wood that news came of a great man among the ancese, who had been favored by a revelation mind and will of the Great Spirit. I was huntthe prairie, at a great distance from my lodge, I saw a stranger approaching; at first I was apasive of an enemy, but, as he drew nearer. his showed him to be an Ojibbeway [Chippeway;] hen he came up, there was something very e and peculiar in his manner. He signified to at I must go home, but gave no explanation of the cause. He refused to look at me, or enter into any kind of conversation. I thought he must be crazv. but nevertheless accompanied him to my lodge. When we had smoked he remained a long time silent, but at last began to tell me he had come with a message from the prophet of the Shawnesse. "Henceforth," said he, "the fire must never be suffered to go out in your lodge. Summer and winter, day and night, in the storm, or when it is calm, you must remember that the life in your body, and the fire in your lodge, are the same, and of the same date. If you suffer your fire to be extinguished, at that moment your life will be at its end. You must not suffer a dog to live. You must never strike either a man, a woman, a child, or a dog. The prophet himself is coming to shake hands with you; but I have come before, that you may know what is the will of the Great Spirit, communicated to us by him, and to inform you that the preservation of your life, for a single moment, depends on your entire obelience. From this time forward, we are neither to be drunk to steal to lie, or to go against our enemies. While we yield an entire obedience to these commands of the Great Spirit, the Sioux, even if they come to our country, will not be able to see us; we shall be protected and made happy." I listened to all he had to say, but told him, in answer, that I could not believe we should all die, in case our fire went out; in many instances, also, it would be difficult to avoid punishing our children: our dogs were useful in aiding us to hunt and take animals so that I could not believe the Great Spirit had any wish to take them from us. He continued talking to us until late at night: then he lay down to sleep in my lodge. I happened to wake first in the morning, and perceiving the fire had gone out, I called him to get up, and see how many of us were living, and how many dead. He was prepared for the ridicule I attempted to throw upon his doctrine, and told me that I had not vet shaken hands with the prophet. His visit had been to prepare me for this important event, and to make me aware of the obligations and risks I should incur by entering into the engagement implied in taking in my hand the message of the prophet. I did not rest entirely tasy in my unbelief. The Indians, generally, received the doctrine of this man with great humility and fear. Distress and anxiety were visible in every countenance. Many killed their dogs, and endeavored to practice obedience to all the commands of this new preacher, who still remained among us. But, as was usual with me, in any emergency of this kind, I went to the traders, firmly believing, that if the Deity had any communications to make to men, they would be given, in the first instance, to white men. The traders ridiculed and despised the idea of a new revelation of the Divine will, and the thought that it should be given to a poor Shawnee. Thus was I confirmed in my infidelity. Nevertheless, I did not openly avow my unbelief to the Indians, only I refused to kill my dogs, and showed no great degree of anxiety to comply with his other requirements. As long as I remained among the Indians, I made it my business to conform, as far as appeared consistent with my immediate convenience and comfort, with all their customs. Many of their ideas I have adopted; but I always found among them opinions which I could not hold. The Ojibbeway whom I have mentioned, remained some time among the Indians in my neighborhood, and gained the attention of the principal men so effectually, that a time was appointed, and a lodge prepared, for the solemn and public espousing of the doctrines of the prophet. When the people, and I among them, were brought into the long lodge, prepared for this solemnity, we saw something carefully concealed under a blanket, in figure and dimensions bearing some resemblance to the form of a This was accompanied by two young men, who, it was understood, attended constantly upon it, made its bed at night, as for a man, and slept near it. del But while we remained, no one went near it, or rais-1204

II.—R

۰

2

Ė

ķ

|

k:

136

κd

X-

ed the blanket which was spread over its unknown contents. Four strings of mouldy and discolored beans were all the remaining visible insignia of this important mission. After a long harangue, in which the prominent features of the new revelation were stated and urged upon the attention of all, the four strings of beans, which we were told were made of the flesh itself of the prophet, were carried, with much selemnity, to each man in the lodge, and he was expected to take hold of each string at the top, and draw them gently through his hand. This was called shaking hands with the prophet, and was considered as solemnly engaging to obey his injunctions, and accept his mission as from the Supreme. All the Indians who touched the beans, had previously killed their dogs; they gave up their medicine-bags, [a charm,] and showed a disposition to comply with all that should be required of them.

128

63

40

t

n

We had already been for some time assembled in considerable numbers; much agitation and terror had prevailed among us, and now famine began to be felt. The faces of men wore an aspect of unusual gloominess: the active became indolent, and the spirits of the bravest seemed to be subdued. I started to hunt with my dogs, which I had constantly refused to kill, or suffer to be killed. By their assistance, I found and killed a bear. On returning home, I said to some of the Indians, "Has not the Great Spirit given us our dogs to aid us in procuring what is needful for the support of our life, and can you believe he wishes now to deprive us of their services? The prophet, we are told, has forbid us to suffer our fire to be extinguished in our lodges, and when we travel or hunt, he will not allow us to use a flint and steel, and we are told he requires that no man should give fire to another. Can it please the Great Spirit that we should lie in our hunting-camps without fire; or is it more agreeable to him that we should make fire by rubbing together two sticks, than with a flint and a piece of steel?" But they would not listen to me, and the se-enthusiasm which prevailed among them so far ed me, that I threw away my flint and steel, laid my medicine-bag, and, in many particulars, lied with the new doctrines; but I would not w dogs. I soon learned to kindle a fire by rubsome dry cedar, which I was careful always to about me; but the discontinuance of the use of and steel subjected many of the Indians to inconvenience and suffering. The influence Shawnee prophet was very sensibly and painfelt by the remotest Ojibbeways of whom I had nowledge; but it was not the common impresimong them, that his doctrines had any tendenunite them in the accomplishment of any hupurpose. For two or three years, drunkenness much less frequent than formerly; war was less tht of, and the entire aspect of affairs among was somewhat changed by the influence of But gradually the impression was oblitermedicine-bags, flints and steels were resumed, were raised, and women and children were beate following passage occurs in a subsequent part inner's volume, referring to a date about two later than the one just quoted. The writer evidence of a connection between the first, and we have as lituality of it. The Prophet renewed his labors in er form, as fast as the former impression, to use er's words, was 'obliterated.' The unpopular ctions, only, were omitted in the second edition, all the substantial ones, it will be observed, were ed:—

the spring of the year, after we had assembled trading-house at Pembinah, the chiefs built a lodge, and called all the men together to receive information concerning the newly revealed will Great Spirit. The messenger of this revelawas Manito-o-geezhik, a man of no great fame, ell known to most of the Ojibbeways of that country. He had disappeared for about and in that time, he pretended to have t abode of the Great Spirit, and to have lister instructions, though some of the traders inf he had only been to St. Louis, on the Miss "The Little Clam took it upon him to e object of the meeting. He then sung an and proceeded to detail the principal featt revelation to Manito-o-geezhik. The India more to go against their enemies; they must steal, defraud, or lie; they must neither be eat their food, nor drink their broth when Few of the injunctions of Manito-o-geezhik lesome, or difficult of observance, like those of nee prophet. Many of the maxims and in communicated to the Indians, at this time. kind to be permanently and valuably usefu and the effect of their influence was manif or three years, in the more orderly conduct, what amended condition of the Indians."

Disaffection and indifference were not th stacles the Prophet and his brother were surmount. The chiefs of most of the ti their resolute opponents. They were jeak picious of the new pretenders, ridiculed and ed them, and thwarted their exertions in e ble way. What was to be done with thes Elskwatawa availed himself of a new dep that unfailing superstition which had hi friended him; and a charge of witchcraft w up. His satellites and scouts being engage rections in ascertaining who were, or were be, his friends or his enemies, it was read mined, at head-quarters, who should be Judge, jury and testimony were also prothe same case. He had already taken such gaining the implicit confidence of his vo his own suggestions were considered the be evidence, and the most infallible decision optics of his followers becoming every day 1 upon his authority, there was no want of the most autable convicts.

When the excitement had grown to such a height as to ensure the success of his scheme, he went the length of declaring, that the Great Spirit had directly endowed him with the power of pointing cut, not only those who were in full possession of the diabolicaliert, but those who were impregnated with the least tincture of the diabolical disposition,—let them be old or young, male or female. This convenient arrangement proving perfectly satisfactory, he had only to speak the word,—or, as Heckewelder expresses it. even to nod .- and the pile was prepared for whomsoever he thought proper to devote. The Indians universally have an extreme horror of a wizard or a witch, which no reputation, rank, age, or services, are sufficient to counteract; and of course, resistance or remonstrance on the part even of an accused chieftain, only went to exasperate and hasten the sure destruction which awaited him.

Among the sufferers were several noted Delawares, including the venerable Chief, Teteboxti, whose head had been bleached with more than eighty winters. On being brought to the place of execution, he was told that if he would confess his crime, and give up his medicine-bag,* he would be pardoned. Upon this he 'confessed,' and said his medicine-bag would be found under a certain stone which he described. The stone was examined, but nothing was found. Other places were named in succession, and search made to as little purpose: It therefore became evident that he only wished to procrastinate. He was bound, and the fire about to be kindled, when a young man, more merciful than the rest, terminated his existence with the tomahawk.

*This was supposed to contain tobacco, bones, and other simple matters necessary to the incantations of the sorcerers; and when they were deprived of them, they were supposed to be incapable of further wischief.

R 2

Another of the accused was named BILLY PATTERson. He had resided many years with the whites, and learned so much of the business of a gun-smith, as to be enabled to repair the guns of the Indians;
but neither his usefulness nor his irreproachable life could save him. The same offer was made to him which was made to Teteboxti. He boldly answered that he had nothing to confess,—that he was a christian, and had no connexion with the devil. "You have," said he, "intimidated one poor old man, but you cannot frighten me; proceed, and you shall see how a christian and a warrior can die;" and, with a small hymn-book in his hand, he continued to sing and pray till his voice was stifled by the flames.

lic

日日

THE PERSON

Another eminent victim was the Wyandot Chief known by the English name of Leather-Lips, whose Indian appellation, Shateyaronrah, appears among the signatures to Wayne's famous treaty of Greenville. He was sixty-three years of age, had sustained a most exemplary moral character, and was particularly attached to the American cause, as opposed to the English. The latter circumstance throws some light upon his fate. But whatever the accusation or the evidence was, -and probably the one constituted the other, -orders were given to an influential chief,* of the same nation with the convict, in the Prophet's service, who, with four other Indians, immediately started off in quest of him. He was found at home, and notified of the sentence which had been passed upon him. He entreated, reasoned and promised, but all in vain. The inexorable messengers of death set about digging his grave, by the side of his wigwam. He now dressed himself with his finest lothes, and, having refreshed himself with a hasal of venison, knelt down on the brink of the His executioner knelt with him, and offered rayer to the Great Spirit in his behalf. This ne last ceremony. The Indians withdrew a few and seated themselves around him on the d. "The old Chief," says the original describer harrid scene, "inclined forward, resting his mon his hand, his hand upon his knees. While eated, one of the young Indians came up, and : him twice with the tomahawk. For some he lay senseless on the ground, the only reng evidence of life being a faint respiration. Indians all stood around in solemn silence. ng him to breathe longer than they expected, alled upon the whites (one or two of whom spectators,) to take notice how hard he died; unced him a wizard,—no good,—then struck gain, and terminated his existence. The office rial was soon performed." We have given these ulars, disagreeable as they are, to illustrate more y the astonishing influence of the Prophet, as is the means by which he obtained it. The exners in this case were apparently sincere and ientious men; and one of the party was a r of the victim.

* TARHE, or THE CRANE, said to be the oldest Indian at this time in the western country. He lived at Upper Sandusky, about one hundred miles from the mouth of Detroit river, and was principal chief of the Porcupine Wyandots, who resided at that place. More will be seen of him hereafter.

s not to be presumed, that the Prophet was, in see instances, without the assistance of his brothough the latter was for the present acting his chiefly behind the curtain. But Tecumseh is rather to have favored a different system, if he ot oppose this; and accordingly we find that the time when most of the Kickapoos joined idian Confederation, one of their leading men, a ain, opposed to the new-fangled doctrine and r, was quietly disabled by being reduced to a te capacity. Again, an Indian scout, sent to the correspondent cited in the History of the Indians.

Prophet's encampment, in 1810, by an American authority, to gain information of his designs, reported that the same course had been taken among that proverbially warlike tribe, the Winnebagoes; and that one of their old chiefs had told him, with tears in his eyes, that the other village sachems were divested of their power, and that every thing was managed by the warriors. A more audacious proposal, to murder all the principal chiefs of several tribes, was covertly circulated at one time. These were the men, it was said, who had bartered the Indian territory away for a song, and had traitorously connived at the inroads and trespasses of the settlers.

This suggestion bears marks of the energy and courage of Tecumseh, as decidedly as the witcheraft policy does of the cunning and ingenuity of the Prophet. There is an anecdote recorded of the former, which would lead us to the same inference re-

100

l'in

g

8

specting his character.

Two or three years after the bloody transactions just detailed, which happened chiefly in 1807, Tecumsel had a conference, (to be noticed more fully hereafter) with Governor Harrison of Indiana, at Vincennes. On that occasion, being charged with hostile designs against the Americans, he disclaimed them. A Potawatamie, called the DEAD CHIEF, from being deaf, was present, but did not learn what passed until the next day. He then came to the Governor, and asked him why he had not been called upon to confront Tecumseh, in relation to those charges. He said he should have been very willing to assert the truth in the presence of the brothers and their followers. This declaration being made in the presence of several Indians, soon came to the knowledge of Tecumseh, who gave directions to his brother, to have the Potawatamie killed on his return home. A friend of the latter informed him of his danger, but, no way alarmed, the intrepid Chief returned to his family, who were encamped on the bank of the Wabash, opposite Vincennes, and having put on his -dress, and painted himself in the best style of a rior, he seized his rifle, his tomahawk, war-club, scalping-knife, and thus equipped, paddled over is cance to the camp of Tecumseh. The Govor's interpreter, Mr. Baron, was at that time in the of the latter. As soon as the Potawatamie came r it, he upbraided Tecumseh for having given the r to assessinate him, as cowardly, and unworthy warrior; "but here I am now," said he, "come kill me." Tecumseh made no answer. "You your men," he added, " can kill the white people's s, and call them bears, but you dare not face a rior." Tecumseh still remaining silent, he heapmon him every insult that could provoke him to it. He reproached him with being the slave of 'red-coats,' (the British,) and finally applied to him rm of reproach which can never be forgotten by Indian. During the whole time, Tecumseh seemnot in the least to regard him, but continued to verse with Mr. Baron. Wearied, at length, with his less efforts to draw out his adversary, he gave the r-whoop of defiance, and paddled off in his canoe. ere is reason, adds our authority, to believe that the er of Tecumseh was obeyed. The Dead Chief no more seen at Vincennes."

* Dawson's Memoirs of Harrison.

CHAPTER XIII.

History of Tecumseh and the Prophet continued—The latter encamps at Tippecance—Sends a message to Governor Harrison—Visits him at Vincennes—Increase of his forces—Attention of the General Government aroused—Tocumseh visits the Governor—His speech, and journey southward—Battle of Tippecance, November, 1811—Consequences of it—Indian Council at Mississiniway—Council at Malden—Speeches and Anecdotes of the Cranz, Walk-in-the Water, Round-Head, and other Chiefs—Sequel of the history of the two brothers—Final exertions of Tecumseh—His death—The death of the Prophet.

To resume our narrative;—such reports came to the ears of Governor Harrison, during the year 1807, respecting the movements of the Indians, and especially those of the Prophet in pursuit of his victims, that he thought proper to send a 'speech' to the Shawanese chiefs, couched in very severe terms. Most of those addressed being absent, the necessity of replying devolved on the Prophet, and he requested the messenger to indite for him the following address:

"Father!

"I am very sorry that you listen to the advice of bad birds. You have impeached me with having correspondence with the British; and with calling and sending for the Indians from the most distant parts of the country, "to listen to a fool that speaks not the words of the Great Spirit, but the words of the devil." Father! these impeachments I deny, and say they are not true. I never had a word with the British, and I never sent for any Indians. They came here themselves, to listen and hear the words of the Great Spirit.

"Father! I wish you would not listen any more to the voice of bad birds; and you may rest assured that it is the least of our idea to make disturbance, and we will rather try to stop such proceedings than encourage them."

The year 1808 opened with immense numbers of Indians from the lakes crowding round the neighborhood of Fort Wayne. Their attendance on the Prophet, the year previous, had induced them to neglect raising corn, and they now found themselves in a state of starvation. It was considered necessary by the Governor, to supply them with food, lest hunger might drive them to extremities, and to marauding upon the frontier settlers of the United States; and he therefore sent orders to the Agent at Fort Wayne to allow them provisions from the public stores.

In May or June of the season just mentioned, the Prophet selected, for his future and permanent residence, a spot on the upper part of the Wabash, which was called Tippecanoe. He removed thither, and his motley forces moved after him. These now consisted of some thirty or forty Shawanees, with about one hundred Potawatamies, Chippewas, Ottawas and Winnebagoes. The manœuvre met with no little opposition. Some of the Miamies, and Delawares in particular, had been determined to prevent it, and they sent a deputation of chiefs to effect that purpose; but the Prophet would not even see them, and Tecumsch, who encountered them on the way, gave them such a reception as at once altered their disposition to advance any farther in the business.

In July the Prophet sent a pacific message to Governor Harrison, complaining bitterly of the manner in which he had been misrepresented, and proposing to visit the Governor in person. He fulfilled this promise during the next month, and spent a fortnight at Vincennes. Long conferences and conversations ensued, but it could not be ascertained that his politice were particularly British. His denial of his being under any such influence, was strong and apparently candid. He said that his sole object was to reclain the Indians from the bad habits which they had contracted, and to cause them to live in peace and friendship with all mankind, and that he was particularly appointed to that office by the Great Spirit. He frequently, in presence of the Governor, harangued his followers, and his constant them was the evils arising from war and from the immoderate use of ardent spirits. His farewell speech exhibits the view of his system which he chose to promulgate at Vincennes:

" Father!

"It is three years since I first began with that system of religion which I now practice. The white people and some of the Indians were against me; but I had no other intention but to introduce among the Indians those good principles of religion which the white people profess. I was spoken badly of by the white people, who reproached me with misleading the Indians; but I defy them to say that I did any thing amiss.

"Father!—I was told that you intended to hang me.
When I heard this, I intended to remember it, and tell my father, when I went to see him, and relate to him the truth.

"I heard, when I settled on the Wabash, that my father, the Governor, had declared that all the land between Vincennes and Fort Wayne was the property of the Seventeen Fires.

"I also heard that you wanted to know, my father, whether I was God or man; and that you said, if I was the former, I should not steal horses. I heard this from Mr. Wells, but I believe it originated with himself.

"The Great Spirit told me to tell the Indians, that he had made them and made the world—that he had placed them on it to do good, and not evil,

"I told all the red-skins that the way they were in was not good, and that they ought to abandon it. I aid that we ought to consider ourselves as one man, but to live agreeable to our several customs, the red people after their mode, and the white people after theirs. Particularly that they should not drink whiskey—that it was not made for them, but the white people, who alone know how to use it—that it is the cause of all the mischiefs which the Indians suffer; and that they must always follow the directions of the Great Spirit, and we must listen to him, as it was he that has made us.

"Brothers!—Listen to nothing that is bad. Do not take up the tomahawk, should it be offered by the British, or by the Long-Knives. Do not meddle with any thing that does not belong to you, but mind your own business, and cultivate the ground, that your women and your children may have enough to live on I now inform you that it is our intention to live in peace with our father and his people forever.

"My father!—I have informed you what we mean to do, and I call the Great Spirit to witness the truth of my declaration. The religion which I have established for the last three years, has been attended to by the different tribes of Indians in this part of the world. Those Indians were once different people; they are now but one; they are all determined to practice what I have communicated to them, that has come immediately from the Great Spirit through

"Brother!—I speak to you as a-warrior. You are one. But let us lay aside this character, and attend to the care of our children, that they may live in comfort and peace. We desire that you will join us for the preservation of both red and white people. Formerly, when we lived in ignorance, we were foolish; but now, since we listen to the voice of the Great Spirit, we are happy.

"I have listened to what you have said to us. You have promised to assist us. I now request you, in behalf of all the red people, to use your exertions to prevent the sale of liquor to us. We are all well pleased to hear you say that you will endeavor to promote our happiness. We give you every assurance that we will follow the dictates of the Great Spirit.

36 36

E

Ne.

51

i 🗷

E

1

=

"We are all well pleased with the attention that you have showed us; also with the good intentions of our father, the President. If you give us a few articles, such as needles, flints, hoes, powder, and other things, we shall be able to take the animals that afford us meat with powder and ball."

After this affair, nothing material occurred till the latter part of April, 1810, when the Governor received information that the Prophet was again exciting the Indians to hostilities against the United States. A trader, of undoubted veracity, who had been for some time at the residence of the impostor, assured him, (the Governor,) that the Prophet had at least a thousand souls under his controlperhaps from three hundred and fifty to four hundred men—principally composed of Kickapoos and Winnebagoes, but with a considerable number of Potawatamies and Shawanees, and a few Chippewas and Ot-About the middle of May, rumor magnified this force to six or eight hundred warriors, and the combination was said to extend to all the tribes between Illinois river and Lake Michigan,-the Wyandots, and the Sacs and Foxes being among the num-Still, nothing could be distinctly proved against the Prophet. Governor Harrison sent for the leading member of the Shaker society, who resided about twenty miles from Vincennes, and endeavored to prevail on him to take a speech to the Prophet, who affected to follow the Shaker principles in every thing but the vow of celibacy; and this leader of the Shakers had no hesitation in asserting that the Shawane was under the same divine inspiration that he himself was, although, for reasons growing out of his situation as a savage, he and his immediate followers were permitted to cohabit with their women this was not the general feeling. Much alarm i on the frontiers, especially as some lawless ad been committed by individuals nominally the Prophet's management. The Governor active preparations for open hostilities; and the on of the General Government itself had at become so much aroused, that an order from the ent to make prisoners of both Tecumseh and other, was suspended only that a last effort be more advantageously made for a comprovith the disaffected tribes. Early in 1811, the i force mustered at Tippecanoe was larger than nor Harrison himself could easily collect; and dy-guard of Tecumseh, on the visit which he ne former at Vincennes, in July of this season, ted of more than three hundred men. s meeting took place ostensibly in consequence seech which the Governor had sent to the broth-their encampment on the Wabash, in June. d taken that occasion to repeat his former com-3 of the insults and injuries he supposed to have offered to American citizens by Indians under nfluence; to inform them that he had heard of ecent attempts to hasten hostilities between the and various Indian tribes; and, finally, to rethem, in strong terms, of the consequences of ing in such conduct. "Brothers!"—was one expressions in this address.—I am myself of the Knife fire. As soon as they hear my voice, you e them pouring forth their swarms of huntingmen, as numerous as the mosquitoes on the of the Wabash. Brothers! take care of their ." Tecumseh promptly replied to this commuon, by promising to visit the Governor in pre-eighteen days, for the purpose of 'washing all these bad stories.'

in the delay occurred; but upon Saturday, the 27th ly, he made his appearance at Vincennes, with ree hundred followers. As neither the Governthe inhabitants generally were desirous of prolonging his entertainment, it was proposed to commence the negotiations on Monday; but this he de clined doing, and it was late on Tuesday before he made his appearance at the arbor prepared for the Nor did he then come, without taking the precaution to ascertain previously, whether the Governor was to be attended by armed men at the council,-if so, he should adopt the same etiquette. ing left to his own option, and given to understand that his example would be imitated, he came with a guard of nearly two hundred men, some armed with bows and arrows, and others with knives, tomahawks and war-clubs. The Governor, on the other hand was attended by a full troop of dragoons, dismounted and completely furnished with fire-arms; and he had taken care, on Tecumseh's first arrival, to secure the town, by stationing two foot companies and a detachment of cavalry in the outskirts. He placed himself in front of his dragoons; Tecumseh stood at the head of his tawny band, and the conference commenc ed with a speech on the part of the Governor. was briefly replied to; but a heavy rain coming on matters remained in statu quo, until the next day when Tecumseh made a long and ingenious har angue, both exposing and justifying his own scheme much more openly than he had ever done before.

Respecting the demand which the Governor had made, that two Potawatamie murderers should be given up to punishment, who were stated to be resident at Tippecanoe, he in the first place denied that they were there; and then went on very deliberately to show, that he could not deliver them up if they were there. "It was not right," he said, "to punish those people. They ought to be forgiven, as well at those who had recently murdered his people in the Illinois. The whites should follow his own example of forgiveness; he had forgiven the Otawas and the Osages. Finally, he desired that matters might remain in their present situation, and especially that no set tlements should be attempted upon the lands recently purchased of certain tribes, until he should return from a visit among the Southern Indians. Then he would go to Washington, and settle all difficulties with the President; and meanwhile, as the neighboring tribes were wholly under his direction, he would despatch messengers in every quarter to prevent further mischief." He concluded with offering the Governor a quantity of wampum, as a full atonement for the murders before mentioned. The latter made an indignant rejoinder; the meeting was broken up; and Tecumseh, attended by a few followers, soon afterwards commenced his journey down the Wabash for the Southward.

-

¥

£

:

4

٥

M.

100

68

 $\mathbf{T}$

g :.

, ba re.

ar h

М

d.

ı, Ç

TIE.

Such was his last appearance previous to the The popular excitement had now become greater than ever. Numerous meetings were held, and representations forwarded to the Federal Executive. But before these documents could reach their destination, authority had been given to Governor Harrison to commence offensive operations at discretion, and forces, in addition to those within his territorial jurisdiction, were placed at his disposal. Banditti under the Prophet," wrote the Secretary of War, Mr. Eustis, in a communication of July 20th, "are to be attacked and vanquished, provided such a )ee measure shall be rendered absolutely necessary."

It is not our purpose to detail the subsequent measures of Governor Harrison, which terminated in the celebrated battle of Tippecanoe; and much less, to agitate the question heretofore so inveterately contested, respecting the general propriety of the offensive operations he commenced, or his particular system or success in conducting them. The battle took place on the 7th of November, 1811; the Governor having previously sent Indian messengers to demand of the various tribes in the Prophet's encampment, that they should all return to their respective territories; that the stolen horses in their and his possession, should be given up; and that all murderers, ther sheltered at Tippecanoe, should be delivered over justice. The first messengers, about the last of tember, had the effect of bringing out a friendly utation from the Prophet, full of professions peace. But fresh outrages were committed by followers about the same time; and, when su head-men of the Delaware tribe undertook, in C ber, to go upon a second mission, they are sa have been abruptly met by a counter deputation: the Prophet, requiring a categorical answer to question, 'whether they would or would not join against the United States?' The Delawares, no theless, went on, and having visited the Prop camp, returned to Governor Harrison, now or march, with the report of their having been ill t ed, insulted, and finally dismissed with contempt remarks upon themselves and the Governor. ty-four Miamies next volunteered to go upon thankless business. They seem to have been t entertained, for the good reason, that they dec upon raising the tomahawk against their empl At all events, these serviceable diplomatists sr themselves the pains of returning.

The particulars of the battle are well known. Governor having entered into the heart of the te ry occupyed by the Prophet,-but claimed by United States, as being purchased of those tribes had the least-disputed claim to it,—he encampe the night of the 6th, in the vicinity of the Prot force; and a suspension of hostilities was agreed on between the two parties, until a conference of take place on the ensuing day. Whether, as Prophet affirmed on this occasion by his messer he had sent a pacific proposal to the Governor, w accidentally failed to reach him; or whether he now actually 'desirous of avoiding hostilities if I ble,' but felt himself compelled to commence t need not be discussed. His forces, supposed to 1 ber from five hundred to eight hundred war made a violent attack on the American army, on the morning of the 7th; and one of the most perate struggles ensued, of which we have any record in the history of Indian warfare. The enemy was at length repulsed, leaving thirty-eight warriors dead on the field. The Americans lost about fifty killed, and about twice that number wounded. The Prophet's town was rifled, and the army commenced its return to Vincennes.

Tecumseh, who was absent when the battle took place, returned soon afterwards from the South, and, without doubt, was exceedingly surprised and mortified by the conduct of the Prophet. From this time, while the latter lost much of his influence, the former took a more independent and open part. It cannot be positively decided whether he had previously maintained a special understanding with the British; but his subsequent course admits of little controversy.

He proposed to Governor Harrison, to make the contemplated journey to Washington; but, as the Governor expressed a determination that he could not go in the capacity which he deemed suitable to his standing, the idea was abandoned. Thenceforth, whatever his intentions had been, he determined upon the necessity of fighting; and it naturally followed, whatever had been his disposition towards the British authorities,—theirs towards him was sufficiently plain,—that he should no longer hesitate to avail himself of every fair opportunity of cooperation.

Still, it was necessary to preserve appearances until matters were ready for disclosure: and, of course,—such were the consequences of the recent defeat, and such the disposition of many vacillating or opposing tribes,—there was an extremely difficult part to be acted. Some of the speeches made at a grand council of twelve tribes, held in May, 1812, at Missisinniway, will throw light upon the subject. The Wyandots began—a tribe universally regarded as the head of the great Indian family:

"Younger brothers!"—said the speaker—"You that reside on the Wabash, listen to what we say; and in order that you may distinctly hear and clearly understand our words, we now open your ears and place your hearts in the same position they were placed in by the Great Spirit when he created you.

"Younger brothers!—We are sorry to see your path filled with thorns and briars, and your land covered with blood. Our love for you has caused us to come and clean your paths and wipe the blood off your land, and take the weapons that have spilled this blood from you, and put them where you can never reach them again.

"Younger brothers!—This is done by the united voice of all your elder brothers, that you now see present, who are determined not to be disobeyed. This determination of your elder brothers, to put an entire stop to the effusion of bloed, has met with the approbation of our fathers, the British, who have advised all the red people to be quiet and not meddle in quarrels that may take place between the white people."

Tecumseh, who found himself in a small minority on this occasion, replied thus:

"Elder brothers!—We have listened with attention to what you have said to us. We thank the Great Spirit for inclining your hearts to pity us; we now pity ourselves; our hearts are good; they never were bad. Governor Harrison made war on my people in my absence: it was the Great Spirit's will he should do so. We hope it will please Him that the white people may let us live in peace. We will not disturb them; neither have we done it, except when they come to our village with the intention of destroying us. We are happy to state to our brothers present. that the unfortunate transaction that took place between the white people and a few of our young men at our village, has been settled between us and Governor Harrison; and I will further state, that had I been at home, there would have been no blood shed at that time.

"We are sorry to find that the same respect has not been paid to the agreement between us and Governor Harrison, by our brothers, the Potawatamies. However, we are not accountable for the conduct of those over whom we have no control. Let the chiefs of that nation exert themselves, and cause their warriors to behave themselves, as we have done and will continue to do with ours.

"Should the bad acts of our brothers, the Potawatamies, draw on us the ill will of our white brothers—and they should come again and make an unprowoked attack on us at our village—we will die like men—but we will never strike the first blow."

The Potawatamies could not overlook such an attack, and their speaker noticed it in terms which reflected severely on the 'pretended Prophet,' who was said to have caused all the difficulty among their young men. He added,—" We have no control over these few vagabonds, and consider them not belonging to our nation; and will be thankful to any people that will put them to death, wherever they are found. As they are bad people, and have learnt to be so from the pretended Prophet, and as he has been the cause of setting those people on our white brothers, we hope • he will be active in reconciling them. As we all hear tim say, his heart is inclined for peace, we hope we wy all see this declaration supported by his future conduct, and that all our women and children may by down to sleep without fear."

Tecumseh then addressed the council once more:

"It is true we have endeavored to give all our brothers good advice; and if they have not listened to it, we are sorry for it. We defy a living creature to say we ever advised any one, directly or indirectly, to make war on our white brothers. It has constantly been our misfortune to have our views misrepresented to our white brethren. This has been done by pretended chiefs of the Potawatamies and others, that have been in the habit of selling land to the white people that did not belong to them."

Here he was called to order by the Delawares. "We have not met," said they, "to listen to such words. The red people have been killing the whites. The just resentment of the latter is raised against the former. Our white brethren are on their feet, with their guns in their hands. There is no time to tell each other, you have done this, and you have done that. If there was, we would tell the Prophet that both red and white people had felt the bad effects of his counsels. Let us all join our hearts and hands together, and proclaim peace through the land of the red people. Let us make our voices be heard and respected, and rely on the justice of our white brethren."

The Miamies and Kickapoos afterwards expressed themselves much to the same effect, and the conference then closed.

The most distinguished chiefs opposed to the two brothers, were the Crane, his Counsellor Between-the-Loss, the Potawatamie Winemack,* and the leader and orator of the Wyandots on the American side of the river Detroit, Walk-in-the-Water. The latter was afterwards forced by circumstances to fight with the British, but at this time he and the Crane were particularly active in persuading various tribes to 'sit still' while their two Fathers should fight out the war,—which was their own business,—in their own way. The British at length took measures to counteract their influence. A council was convened * A war-chief of some distinction. He repeatedly visited Washington after the war, and some characteristic anecdotes—which, however, will hardly bear repetitionare recorded of him. He was always openly friendly to the Americans, and though accused of fighting for the Prophet at Tippecanoe, by no means convicted of that abberration. He died in the summer of 1821.

ulden, at which Elliot, the Indian Agent, and ritish Commanding Officer were present.

e former demanded of the Wyandots whether had advised the other tribes to remain neutral. his, Walk-in-the-water answered: "We have, we believe it best for us, and for our brethren nave no wish to be involved in a war with our r, the Long-Knife, for we know by experience we have nothing to gain by it, and we beg our r, the British, not to force us to war. We reber, in the former war between our fathers, the ih and the Long-Knife, we were both defeated, we the red men lost our country; and you, our r, the British, made peace with the Long-Knife, but our knowledge, and you gave our country to Vou still said to us the real man to the state of the sta

You still said to us, 'my children, you must for your country, for the Loug-Knife will take it you.' We did as you advised us, and we were ted with the loss of our best chiefs and warriors, of our land. And we still remember your contowards us, when we were defeated at the foot vounded in your fort. But what was your convounded in your fort. And then we peace with the Americans, and have enjoyed with them ever since. And now you wish us, red children, again to take up the hatchet against ther, the Long-Knife. We say again, we do iot here interrupted the speaker, and said: it is American talk, and I shall hear no more of f you do not stop, I will direct my soldiers to you and the chiefs, and keep you prisoners, and consider you as our enemies." Walk-in-then then took his seat, to consult the other chiefs; Round-Head, who had openly espoused the h interest, and who was the chief of the small rish to have any thing to do with the war. Fight own battles, but let us, your red children, enjoy party of Wyandots living in Canada, immediately rose and said: "Father! listen to your children. You say that the talk just delivered by my friend Walkin-the-water, is American talk, and that you cannot hear any more of it; and, if persisted in, you will take the chiefs prisoners, and treat them as enemies. Now hear me. I am a chief, and am acknowledged to be such. I speak the sentiments of the chiefs of the tribes, assembled round your council-fire. I now come forward, and take hold of your war-hatchet and will assist you to fight against the Americans!"

He was followed by Tecumseh and the Prophet and by two Wyandot chiefs, Workow and Split-Log: but Walk-in-the-water and his associates stil declined the invitation. Elliot then made some menacing observations, which induced them to leave the council-house, recross the river to Brownstown and communicate the result to the Crane, who was there with his attendants. The latter immediately returned home to Sandusky. The Brownstown Wy andots sent a deputation to the American General a Detroit, headed by Walk-in-the-water, to represent their exposed state, and request protection. For some unknown reason it was not granted, and these In dians were a few days afterwards taken into custod by a large British and Indian detachment, attended, if not commanded, by Tecumseh and Round-Head.

The sequel of these proceedings is too characteristic of several of the individuals we have named, to be omitted in a connection which allows and requires s much collateral light.

Some eight or ten months after the forced accession to the British just mentioned, the Crane propose to General Harrison, who was then encamped with his army at Seneca, that a formal embassy should be sent by the Wyandots, to their brethren in the Britist camp, and to all the Indians who adhered to the British cause, advising them to consult their true interest and retire to their own country. The proposition was approved by General Harrison, and the Cran s requested to take such measures as appeared st proper to give it effect.

la small escort of eight warriors, commanded by botass, the principal war-chief of the nation, was seted to accompany him. Two speeches were t by the Crane, one to be delivered privately to his a people, and the other publicly to the British Inter.

The Wyandot embassy arrived at Brownstown in sty, and the following morning a general council embled to hear the message from their uncle. e multitude was prodigious, and Elliot and M'Kee, British agents, were present. We have been told t Between-the-logs arose in the midst of this host enemies, and delivered with unshaken firmness following speech from the Crane, which had been rusted to him:

Brothers!—the red men, who are engaged in fightfor the British king—listen! These words are mme, Tarhé, and they are also the words of the yandots, Delawares, Shawanees, and Senecas.

Our American father has raised his war-pole, and lected a large army of his warriors. They will n march to attack the British. He does not wish destroy his red children, their wives, and families. wishes you to separate yourselves from the Britand bury the hatchet you have raised. He will merciful to you. You can then return to your n lands, and hunt the game, as you formerly did. equest you to consider your situation, and act wisein this important matter; and not wantonly deby your own people. Brothers! whoever feels posed to accept this advice, will come forward and e hold of this belt of wampum, which I have in hand and offer to you. I hope you will not ree to accept it in presence of your British father, you are independent of him. Brothers! we have ne, and we hope you will decide wisely." II.-T

Not a hand moved to accept the offered pledge of peace. The spell was too potent to be broken by charms like these; but Round-Head arose and addressed the embassy:

"Brothers!—the Wyandots from the Americans—we have heard your talk, and will not listen to it. We will not forsake the standard of our British father; and lay down the hatchet we have raised. I speak the sentiments of all now present, and I charge you, that you faithfully deliver our talk to the American commander, and tell him it is our wish he would send more men against us; for all that has passed between us I do not call fighting. We are not satisfied with the number of men he sends to contend against us. We want to fight in good earnest."

Elliot then spoke. "My children!—As you now see that my children here are determined not to forsake the cause of their British father, I wish you to carry a message back with you. Tell my wife, your American father, that I want her to cook the provisions for me and my red children, more faithfully than she has done. She has not done her duty. And if she receives this as an insult, and feels disposed to fight, tell her to bring more men than she ever brought before, as our former skirmishes I do not call fighting. If she wishes to fight with me and my children, she must not burrow in the earth like a ground-hog, where she is inaccessible. She must come out and fight fairly."

To this, Between-the-logs replied. "Brothers!—I am directed by my American father to inform you, that if you reject the advice given you, he will march here with a large army, and if he should find any of the red people opposing him in his passage through this country, he will trample them under his feet. You cannot stand before him.

"And now for myself, I carnestly intreat you to consider the good talk I have brought, and listen to it. Why would you devote yourselves, your women, and your children, to destruction? Let me tell you, if yes should defeat the American army this time, you met done. Another will come on, and if you detact that, still another will appear that you cannot the tand; one that will come like the waves of the water, and overwhelm you, and sweep you im the face of the earth. If you doubt the account inve of the force of the Americans, you can send your people in whom you have confidence. to examine their army and navy. They shall be permitted to return in safety. The truth is, your British father tells you lies, and deceives you. He boasts of the few victories he gains, but he never tells you of his defeats, of his armies being slaughtered, and his vessels taken on the big water. He keeps all these things to himself.

"And now, father, let me address a few words to Your request shall be granted. I will bear your message to my American father. It is true none of your children appear willing to forsake your standard, and it will be the worse for them. You compare the Americans to ground-hogs, and complain of their mode of fighting. I must confess that a groundhog is a very difficult animal to contend with. He has such sharp teeth, such an inflexible temper, and such an unconquerable spirit, that he is truly a dangerous enemy, especially when he is in his own hole. But, father, let me tell you, you can have your wish. Before many days, you will see the ground-hog floating on yonder lake, paddling his canoe towards your hole; and then, father, you will have an opportunity of attacking your formidable enemy in any way you may think best."

This speech terminated the proceedings of the council. All the Indians, except the Wyandots, dis persed, and they secretly assembled to hear the message sent to them by their own chief.

The Wyandots were directed to quit Skorab* in mediately. They were said to be liars and deceiver and that they had always deceived the Indians. An facts, in evidence of this, were quoted. The buildir of Fort Miami was particularly referred to. It we said to be erected as a refuge for the Indians, be when they were overpowered by Wayne, the gat were shut against them.† The comparative streng of General Harrison's army and of the British force was concealed from them, and they were in a very dangerous condition.

This message was faithfully delivered to the W andots, and produced its full effect upon them. The requested Between-the-logs to inform the Crane, the they were in fact prisoners, but that they had take firm hold of his belt of wampum, and would not fa another gun. They promised, that on the advan of the American army, they would quit the Briti troops, as soon as it was safe to take that decisis measure. And such in fact was the result. Whe Proctor left the country, his Wyandot allies abando ed him, a few miles from the mouth of the riv Tranche, and retired into the forest. Thence the sent a message to General Harrison, imploring a mercy.

Tecumseh and Elskwatawa were seen for the latime previous to their joining the British, at Fo Wayne. The former passed that way to the Mald council, and he then explicitly stated to the Comander of the station, that he was going "to recei from the British twelve horse-loads of ammunitifor the use of his people at Tippecanoe." To visit of the Prophet, which took place immediate fell heavily upon the Wyandots.

† The Crane was wounded in this action, and the lo

* The British, in the Huron dialect.

† We have given our account of the Malden Coun on the authority of Governor Cass, whose sources information may be learned from his able essay on t Late War on the Frontiers. See N. A. Rev. Vol. XXI

after, is referred to in the following communication from the Commander to an American authority:

"On the 12th [July, 1812,] the Prophet arrived at this place, with nearly one hundred Winnebagoes and Kickapoos, who have ever since been amusing the Indian agent at this place with professions of friendable, and it is now evident that he has completely duped the agent, who had suffered him to take the lead in all his councils with the Indians, giving him ammunition, &c. to support his followers until they can receive a supply from Tecumseh.

"On the 19th instant an express arrived in the Prophet's camp from Tecumseh. In order that it should make the better speed, the express stole a horse from some of the inhabitants of the river Raisin, and rode night and day. The horse gave out within twenty miles of this place. This messenger was directed by Tecumseh to tell the Prophet to unite the Indians immediately, and send their women and children towards the Mississippi, while the warriors should strike a heavy blow at the inhabitants of Vincennes; and he, Tecumseh, if he lived, would join him in the country of the Winnebagoes.

"The Prophet found no difficulty in keeping this information to himself and one or two of his confidential followers, and forming a story to suit the palate of the agent here; and, on the 20th instant, he despatched two confidential Kickapoos to effect the objects Tecumseh had in view. In order that these two Indians might make the better speed, they stole my two riding-horses, and have gone to the westward at the rate of one hundred miles in twenty-four hours, at least. To keep the agent blind to his movements, the prophet went early in the morning yesterday, and told the agent that two of his bad young men were missing, and that he feared they had stole some horses. The agent found no difficulty in swallowing the beit offered him, and applauded the Prophet for his honesty in telling of his bad men, as he called them, stealing my horses.

"To keep up appearances, the Prophet has this morning despatched two men on foot, as he tells the agent, to bring back my horses, &c. He says he and all his party will certainly attend the Commissioner of the United States next month at Piqua.

"This he will do, if he finds he cannot raise the western Indians against the United States; but if he finds the western Indians will join him, you may rely on it, he will strike a heavy blow, as Tecumseh says, against the whites in that quarter. You may rely on the correctness of this statement, as I received information relative to the views of Tecumsel, last night, from a quarter that cannot be doubted. The conduct of the agent towards the Prophet, I have been an eye-witness to."

The most remarkable passage in this graphic narration, refers to the exertions Tecumseh was now making for the promotion of the great cause which lay so near his heart. There was occasion indeed for a mighty effort, to regain the ground which his brother had lost. The battle of Tippecanoe was a premature explosion, and a most unfortunate one for his interests. It intercepted the negotiations for new allies, diminished the moral power of the Prophe and frightened and forced many, who were or would have been his adherents, into neutrality in some case and open hostility in others. The vast scheme Tecumseh, the object so long of all his solicitude a his labor, was thrown into confusion, on the v brink of success. He was exasperated, humilian afflicted. He could have wept, like Philip, w his projects were thwarted in mid career by the r ness of his warriors. But here was the trial of noblest qualities. He came forward and made e proposition, looking like compromise, which he d ed consistent with his dignity, -- perhaps necessary it.—but in vain. He saw then, plainly, that the battle must be fought, and his soul grew strong. The wrongs and woes of his race, and the power and pride of the white men, passed before him. The mortification of failure and exposure on his own part, the dishonor brought upon his brother's name, the ignominy of submission, the censure and scorn of his myage rivals, the triumph of his civilized enemy, all were daggers in his bosom. Then boiled within him the frenzy of despair. Fear and hope struggled for the mastery. Pride, revenge, ambition, were roused. 'Let them come, then'-thought he-'I hear them and see them, in the South and in the East, like the summer leaves rolling and rustling in the breeze. It is well. Shall Tecumseh tremble? Shall they say that he hated the white man, and feared him? No! The mountains and plains which the Great Spirit gave, are behind and around me. I, too, have my warriors, and here,—where we were born and where we will die, -on the Scioto, on the Wabash, on the broad waters of the North, my voice shall be heard.'

And it was heard, indeed. At the date of the communication last cited, he had scarcely a hundred followers; and the intentions of the Western Indians, we have seen, were not then ascertained. But from the time of the Malden Council, Tecumseh girded himself to his task, like a strong man for battle. He set his brother and all his emissaries, and at the same time devoted himself, night and day, to the business of recruiting. Repeatedly, before this, he had visited all the tribes on the west banks of the Mississippi, and upon Lakes Superior, Huron and Michigan. now travelled over the route once more. From north to south, and from east to west, he ranged the continent.—threatening, flattering, rousing resentment, alarming superstition, provoking curiosity. No labor fatigued, no disappointment discouraged, no danger alarmed, no emergency surprised him.

The result, with the entire sequel of the history of the two brothers, may be stated in the most general

Those who know any thing of the history of the last war, need not be informed, that Tecumseh was substantially, as well as nominally, the head and life of the Anglo-Indian Department, and that greater forces were collected by his influence, and embodied under his command, than in any other instance from the first settlement of the country. He brought in six hundred Wabash recruits in one body, early in In the attack made upon Fort Stephenson, in the summer of the same year, the enemy numbered but five hundred British regulars, for eight hundred Indians, (under Dickson,) while Tecumseh was at the same time stationed on the road to Fort Meigs with a body of two thousand more, for the purpose of cutting off the American reinforcements on that route.

In the decisive battle of the Moravian Towns, he commanded the right wing of the allied army, and was posted in the only part of it which was engaged with the American troops. Here was his last struggle. Disdaining to fly, when all were flying around him but his own nearest followers, he pressed eagerly into the heart of the contest, encouraging the savages by his voice, and plying the tomahawk with a tremendous energy. He appeared to be advancing, it is said, directly upon Colonel Johnson, who was hastening towards him on the other side, at the head of his mounted infantry. Suddenly a wavering was perceived in the Indian ranks: there was no longer & cry of command among them. Tecumseh had fallen and his bravest men, still surviving, were defeated by the same blow. They fled, leaving thirty-three lead on the field, most of whom were found near Tecumseh.

Upon the question, who had the honor of shooting the great chief,—as all the world admits he was shot,—we shall spend but few words. In the language of another, "there is a possibility that he fell by a pistolshot from the hand of Colonel Johnson. He was certainly killed in that part of the line where the Col

CHAPTER XIV.

Remarks on the character of Tecumseh and the Prople Their facilities for cooperation—Difficulties the lead to overcome—His perseverance and ingenue Means by which he protected his person—Anecof the Battle of Tippecanoe—Frankness of Tecurin disclosing his schemes—Causes of his hostilithe Americans—Trespasses of the whites, and abuses—Object of the belligerent combination—ecdotes of Tecumseh's first visit to Vincenne 1810—His dignity, independence and courage-ideas of the British policy—His speech to Ge Proctor, and remarks on his oratory—His human His genius.

The reputation of the Prophet has suffered the complete ultimate failure of his plans. It suffered the more from the very circumstances w mark him as an extraordinary man,—his career prophet. Tecumseh knew his own talent better to play a game like this; but he also knew, wit doubt, that Elskwatawa was capable of doing i for the advancement of their common object, by ing this coordinate or subordinate part, that adopting the same course with himself, even ha possessed the same species of ability. Together, were endowed with a complete system of qua necessary to accomplish their design; but neither act alone. Tecumsel was frank, warlike, persuin his oratory, popular in his manners, irreproacl in his habits of life. Elskwatawa had more cur than courage; and a stronger disposition to talk, to fight, or exert himself in any other way. But he subtle, fluent, persevering and self-possessed; and was enough. He became an inspired man, and cumsely was his first convert. Others of the might be intrusted with the secret. They had, a events, a great respect for these men; and being both a proud and warlike people, they received with avidity the well-contrived doctrine of their superiority over other tribes, and entered upon a course of projects likely to produce war, -though of war nothing might yet be seen or said,—with the fury of bloodhounds upon a track.

Hence the murders and robberies which so much alarmed and irritated the frontier settlers, and which we have very little doubt were generally committed by individuals of the Prophet's 'banditti,' without his authority, and perhaps against his wishes. young men, especially, like those who brought on Philip's war, were wrought up till the master-spirit himself lost his control over them; and to make the matter worse, most of them were of such a character, in the first instance, that horse-stealing and house-breaking were as easy to them as breathing. Like the refugees of Romulus, they were outcasts, vagabonds and criminals,-in a great degree brought together by the novelty of the preacher's reputation, by curiosity to hear his doctrines, by the fascination of extreme credulity. by restlessness, by resentment against the whites, and by poverty and unpopularity at home.

These things should be taken into consideration, when the success of the Prophet is estimated. ingenuity was tasked to the utmost, in getting and keeping these people together in the first place. Then it was necessary to instruct them just so far, as to put them in the way of preparing themselves for what might happen, and to make them serviceable in collecting and convincing others, without committing the cause too unreservedly to noisy tongues, and to rash hands. Then complaints were made by American authorities, and these must be pacified. Offers of assistance came in from other quarters, and these must be kept secret. At other times, the banditti were reduced to an extreme scarcity of provisions, as might be expected from the numbers collected together, and the kind of life which they led. At first, they were given to understand that corn and pumpkins would be raised for them supernaturally; but the Prophet deemed it easier on the whole to produce these essential articles by other means,—and here was another reason for maintaining a good understanding with his American neighbors. Hence he gave out that he proposed visiting the Governor at Vincennes, with the view of begging provisions,—' for the white people had always encouraged him to preach the word of God to the Indians.' This purpose was carried into execution; and on that occasion it was, that the Governor was 'completely deceived,' by the Prophet's appearance and language. So late as 1811, a quantity of salt was sent up the Wabash for the Prophet's use, together with another quantity intended for the Kickapoos and other Indi-He seems to have balanced some time between necessity and policy before this temptation, but finally adopted the middle course of detaining the entire cargo, and sending a very civil apology to the Governor in payment.

d

约 in a

ne

Ret

te te

In.

San

1C

ba

da

1 ig

10

曲 bi

H

i

State of Street

On the whole, we are inclined to put small faith in the popular theory which represents the Prophet as a fool. Possibly he assumed that character on some occasions, knowing the proverbial reverence of the Indians for an idiot. Allowance should be made also for the reaction produced by his failure at Tippecanoe, although his influence was in some degree restored after that event,-the misfortune being sagely attributed by many to the important circumstance of his wife having touched some of his sacred utensils. Nothing but a series of triumphs on the part of the American forces, the death of his brother, and the loss of all his best friends of his own tribe, (for the Kishopokes were reduced to about twenty warriors during the war,) finally destroyed his character as a Prophet. When this was effected, it was human nature to degrade him below the level of a man.

It might have been expected, that a person of his pretensions, with so many rivals and enemies, would be exposed to the hazard of assassination. But here again he was on his guard; for it was always one of his strong positions, that the least violence offered to him or his followers, would be punished by the immediate interposition of the Great Spirit. The religious character, indeed, was sustained to the last. The Delaware messengers already mentioned found his forces at Tippecanoe in the highest state of excitement, owing to his magical rites, his harangues, and the war-dance which he performed with them day and night. Hence the unexampled bravery manifested in the attack upon the American army. They rushed on the very bayonets of our troops; and in some instances, pressing aside the soldier's musket. they brained him with the war-club. The Prophet, mean while, is said to have been comfortably seated on an adjacent eminence, singing a war-song. He had assured his followers, that the American bullets would do them no harm; and that, while they should have light, their enemies should be involved in thick darkness.* Soon after the battle commenced, he was told that the Indians were falling. 'Fight on! fight on! cried he, never at a loss, 'It will soon be I predicted; and he howled his war-song louder then ever.

The character of Tecumseh appears so fully in the course he pursued, as to require but brief comment. While the Prophet resorted without hesitation to all the wiles of Indian cunning and stratagem, for effecting his own purposes, and for thwarting those of his opponents, his course was as manly and dignified as it was prompt. He was certainly under no obligation to disclose his schemes, and yet he appears never to have taken much pains to conceal them. We know that he was suspected, and ac-

&quot;He was not so much out of the way in this prediction, as in some others. McAfee observes, that the campfres, so long as they remained burning, were 'more serviceable to the Indians than our men

II.—U

cused, of having actively engaged in inducing general hostility, as well as instigating particular outrage among the frontier tribes, for several years before much was actually known of him. This may have been the case, and it may not; the evidence amount to nothing, and the suspicion and accusation alluded to, like the offences themselves, are very easily accounted for upon other and obvious grounds There is no necessity, then, of going at length into the history of the Western country for the last half century, to point out the real grounds of complaint and the real provocations to hostility, which Tecumseh, or his brother, or any other Indian of information and reflection, might have alleged on the part of the tribes, against the American Government of the American people. This would be justifying what we do not admit. It is sufficient to observe that quite enough had occurred, to furnish plausible pretexts for all that the Chiestain is known to have done or attempted to do.

Governor Harrison stated in his annual message for 1809, to the Indiana Legislature, that owing to defects in the Federal law, 'every person has been allowed to trade with the Indians that pleases; which proves a source of numberless abuses, of mischievous effect both to them and ourselves.' Two years be fore, we find an opinion advanced by the same excellent authority on a similar occasion, that 'the ut most efforts to induce them (the Indians) to take up arms would be unavailing, if one only, of the many persons who have committed murders on their people, could be brought to punishment.' To illustrate the truth of this remark, we may mention the murder of Creek Indian at Vincennes, early in 1810, and of source subsequently to the particular transactions altided to in the message. He was shot by a white man, an Italian trader, upon the pretext that the Indian, who was intoxicated, had shown a disposition to do him some injury. The Governor discharged his duty by causing the Italian to be arrested and tri ed; but, in the language of our informant, 'as in too many other cases, acquittal was the consequence.'*

We are farther told, that about the same time, two Indians were wounded by a white man, at a few miles' cumstance from Vincennes. The occurrence of circumstances of this nature is said to have been a source of great embarrassment and vexation to Governor Harrison; but in this case, he could only send out,—not a constable for the aggressor, for that course had been sufficiently tried,—but a surgeon for the wounded men, who both finally recovered.

It cannot be doubted, that the character of these proceedings was well understood, and indignantly resented by all the tribes which obtained knowledge of them.-as most of them did in the course of their own experience. The house of a white man in Ohio was robbed, during this same summer, by a member of the Delaware tribe, so famous for its faithful, and more than faithful adherence to the American cause. According to the stipulations of Wayne's treaty, expressly provided for giving up criminals to the parties respectively injured,—and scrupulously observed up to this date, we should add, on the part of the Indians,—the robber in the present instance was demanded of the Delawares. The answer was that the nation never would give up another man, until some of the white people were punished, who had murdered members of their tribe; they would however punish him themselves. And they did accord-. ingly put him to death.

But all these were trifling causes of irritation, compared with those which had occurred at various periods, in the treaties and other negotiations, public and private, whereby immense quantities of territory had been obtained of the Indians. It is not intended to insinuate, that the Government was in fault upon any of these occasions. But in the transaction of affairs of this nature, to such an extent at such a distance.

* Dawson's Narrative.

by the instrumentality of agents,—as likely as any other men to be sometimes ignorant, insolent, and avaricious,—offences must needs come. On the other hands, in cases wherein the Government was not even nominally concerned, (whatever the understanding of the vendors might be upon that point) the most flagitious deception had been practised. In still other instances, where the conduct of the purchasers was unobjectionable, there were conflicting claims to territory, which one or more tribes, or portions of tribes, or perhaps individual chiefs, nevertheless undertook to convey. Owing to these and similar causes, the Indians had very generally become extremely suspicious of proposals for the purchase of land.

They perceived, too, independently of any unfair

6

d

dealing upon either side, that the white population was advancing upon them with the most formidable rapidity. Something must be done, then, in self-defence. Setting aside past impositions, it was absolutely necessary to prevent them for the future; and setting aside all imposition, it was necessary to raise some universal and effectual barrier against inroads of any kind, in any quarter. It is recorded, accordingly, by an historian already cited, that the agitation among the Indians at this time was accounted for by some of them, by saying, that they were endeavoring to effect what had frequently been recommended to them by the United States, viz; a more cordial union among the various tribes. The writer considers this an 'attempt at deception;' but yet his facts would seem to outweigh his opinion. War might or might not be anticipated as an ultimate resort, in offence or defence; and 'British agitators' might or might not be actually engaged, as certainly they were interested, in producing that result, and preparing the tribes for it. But it appears to us, there can be no reasonable doubt, that an effective and cordial union of the tribes, for the purposes just mentioned, was actually the precise object in view.

inly was the leading principle in the schemes umseh.

principle he never disavowed. He declared e most open manner, on every suitable occand with it, the cogent reasoning upon which aind it was founded. In July 1810, he convery fully upon the subject with a person sent rother by the Governor of Indiana, to dissuade m war and to gain information of his views. I that the Great Spirit had given this great -meaning the American continent,-to his red n; but the whites, who were placed on the de of the big water, not content with their had crossed over—seized upon the coast the Indians from the sea to the lakes—and unn to say that this tract belongs to one tribe, this ther, and so on-when the Great Spirit had the common property of them all. 'They had d far enough,—they would go no farther. he same time disclaimed having intended to var, but expressed his opinion that it would not ible to preserve peace, unless the Indian princommon property should be recognized, and gress of the white settlements discontinued. n proposed going to Vincennes, for the purf convincing the Governor that matters had is-represented to him.

visit accordingly took place in August; and states most distinctly,—Mr. Dawson's phrase he broadest manner,—that his policy had been tish and extend the principle of common propa means of necessary self-defence; that the ere afraid of being pushed back into the lakes, re therefore determined to make a stand where w were. At the formal interview which enecumseh, who was attended by a body of folmanifested so much irritation, that the Govpprehended an attack upon the spot; the cit-vere alarmed; troops were called in; and a f great confusion ensued. But although the proud Chieftain apologized for this demonstration of spirit at the next conference, and then appeared perfectly cool, he still persisted in the statements made in the outset. When asked by the Governor, whether it was his intention to prevent the surveying of a certain territory, recently purchased, he answered, that himself and those who were joined with him were determined that the old boundary should continue.

LU 2

The Governor afterwards visited him at his camp, for the purpose of sounding him privately. Being asked if his intentions were really what he had openly avowed, he replied that they were. He had no complaint to make against the United States, but their purchasing the Indian land as they did; and he should very much regret the necessity of making war for this single cause. On the contrary, he was, anxious to be upon good terms with them. If the President would give up the late purchase, and agree to make no more in the same manner, he would even become their ally, and would fight with them against the English; if these terms could not be complied with, he should be obliged to fight with the English against them. The Governor assured him that the President should be informed of his views, but also expressed his opinion, that there was no prospect of their being acceded to. 'Well!' answered the warrior, 'as the Great Chief is to determine the matter, I hope the Great Spirit will put sense enough in his head, to induce him to give up the land. True, he is so far off, that the war will not injure him. He may sit still in his town and drink his wine, while you and I will have to fight it out.'

At the last conference which took place previously to the battle of Tippecanoe, it is stated that his designs were more completely developed, than ever before.* And this, it should be observed, was his own voluntary and deliberate disclosure. 'The States had set the example,' he said, 'of forming a union among all the fires,—why should they censure the Indians for following it?' He had now succeeded in combining the Northern tribes, and he was about visiting the South, for the purpose of completing the scheme. But war, if it ensued, would be no fault of his. He hoped that the Governor would prevent settlements from being made on the new purchase till he returned from his journey in the Spring. He would then visit the President himself at his leisure, and the matter should be settled with him.

* Dawson's Narrative, p. 182.

This speech has been called 'an artful evasion, easily seen through.' It appears to us, on the contrary, to be a model of manly frankness. The Orator did not expressly state, indeed, that the combination alluded to, anticipated the possibility or probability of war. But this was unnecessary. It was the natural inference in any reasonable mind. It had been frequently so stated and so understood; and repetition could only exasperate. On the whole, Tecumseh seems to have manifested a noble dignity in the avowal and discussion of his policy, equalled only by the profound sagacity in which it originated, and the intelligent energy which conducted it, against every opposition and obstacle, so nearly to its completion. He might be wrong, but it is evident enough he was sincere.

As for British instigation, we need not suggest the distinction between a disposition upon their part, and a counter disposition upon his; or between himself and the modey multitude of fanatical and ferocious vagabends, who, unfortunately, formed a large part of the Prephet's first congregation, and some of whom were as troublesome to each other and to him, as they were to the white settlers. Outrages were committed, as we have seen, on both sides,—and criminals refused to be given over to justice by both,—the Indians copying, in this respect, the example of the American authorities. But we need not pursue the subject. The best existing evidence with regard to Tecumseh's

Tab

如

FOR

them

TEM

松本

W

Mes

4 11

NYBE

(city

SURB

DE SEE

PER

135

-

1000

SEL !

ALC: U

S 80 W

130 let's

dg

in ti

et in le in

be A

47

bod

S DECK

bite

A US

b fr

L

Ind.

lo I

& el particular interest in it, seems to be his own, which has been given.

Nor can it be doubted, that he perfectly understood the policy of the English. He told Governor Harrison, when he declared the necessity which might arise of an alliance with them, that he knew they were always urging the Indians to war for their own advantage, and not to benefit his countrymen. 'And here,' we are told,* 'he clapped his hands, and imitated a person hallooing at a dog, to set him fighting with another, thereby insinuating that the British thus endeavored to set the Indians on the Americans. The truth is, he was too proud for a subordinate His confederates might do as they chose, but for himself, he would maintain the dignity of a free man, and a warrior. He abandoned his plan of visiting the President, because he could not be received as the head of the deputation. It is said, that, in the last conference at Vincennes, he found himself, at the end of a long and energetic speech, unprovided with a seat. Observing the neglect, Governor Harrison directed a chair to be placed for him, and requested him to accept it. Father,' said the interpreter, 'requests you to take a chair.' 'My Father!'—replied the chief,—'The sunis my father, and the earth is my mother; I will repose upon her bosom.' And he adjusted himself on the ground in the Indian manner.

A qualified remark has been made upon his courage; but his uniform conduct during the war, is certainly sufficient to establish this point beyond controversy. The same may be said of the fearlessness shown in his visits to Vincennes; and especially in his exposure of himself on that occasion, though he must have perceived that he was feared, suspected, and even guarded by large bodies of troops, drawn out for that express purpose. It is very illustrative of the apparent diversity in the character of Elskwatawa and his own in this respect, that when the Delawares sent a deputation of chiefs to break up the Prophet's settlement at Tippecanoe, the latter would not deign, as Mr. Dawson expresses it, to give them an interview; but despatched his brother to them, 'whose threats or persuasions were sufficient to drive back the chiefs, with strong indications of terror.'

* Dawson's Narrative, p. 159.

When General Proctor began to prepare for retreating from Malden, Tecumseh, having learned his intention, demanded an interview, and, in the name of all the Indians, delivered an animated speech. If the spirit, which it manifests, could have had its intended effect in inducing the General to fight before he retreated, the result must at least have been more glorious, if not more favorable to his cause.

"Father!—Listen to your children! You have them now all before you.

- "The war before this, our British father gave the hatchet to his red children, when our old chiefs were alive. They are now dead. In that war our father was thrown flat on his back by the Americans, and our father took them by the hand without our knowledge. We are afraid that our father will do so again at this time.
- "Summer before last, when I came forward with my red brethren, and was ready to take up the hatchet in favor of our British father, we were told not to be in a hurry—that he had not yet determined to fight the Americans.
- "Listen!—When war was declared, our father tood up and gave us the tomahawk, and told us that he was then ready to strike the Americans—that he wanted our assistance—and that he would certainly get us our lands back, which the Americans had taken from us.
- "Listen!—You told us, at that time, to bring forward our families to this place, and we did so. You also promised to take care of them—they should want for nothing, while the men would go and fight the enemy—that we need not trouble ourselves about the enemy's garrison—that we knew nothing about them—and that our father would attend to that part of the business. You also told your red children that you would take good care of your garrison here, which made our hearts glad.

"Listen!—When we were last at the Rapids it is true we gave you little assistance. It is hard to fight people who live like ground-hogs.

"Father, listen!-Our fleet has gone out; we know they have fought: we have heard the great guns:* but we know nothing of what has happened to our father with one arm. Our ships have gone one way, and we are much astonished to see our father tying up every thing and preparing to run away the other, without letting his red children know what his intentions are. You always told us to remain here, and take care of our lands; it made our hearts glad to hear that was your wish. Our great father, the king. is the head, and you represent him. You always told us you would never draw your foot off British ground. But now, father, we see you are drawing back, and we are sorry to see our father doing so without seeing the enemy. We must compare our father's conduct to a fat dog, that carries its tail upon its back, but when affrighted, it drops it between its legs and runs off.

"Father, listen!—The Americans have not yet defeated us by land—neither are we sure that they have done so by water—we therefore wish to remain here, and fight our enemy, should they make their appearance. If they defeat us, we will then retreat with our father.

"At the battle of the Rapids, last war, the Americans certainly defeated us; and when we returned to our father's fort, at that place the gates were shut against us. We were afraid that it would now be the case; but instead of that, we now see our British father preparing to march out of his garrison.

*Alluding to Perry's Victory. † Commodore Barclay.

"Father!-You have got the arms and ammunition which our great father sent for his red children. If you have an idea of going away, give them to us, and you may go and welcome for us. Our lives are in the hands of the Great Spirit. We are determined to defend our lands, and if it be his will, we wish to leave our bones upon them."

This celebrated speech is probably as good a specimen as any on record, of the eloquence of Tecum-It was a natural eloquence, characteristic, as all natural eloquence must be, of the qualities of the man. As Charlevoix says of the Canadian savages, it was 'such as the Greeks admired in the barbarians,'strong, stern, sententious, pointed, perfectly undisguised. It abounded with figures and with graphic touches, imprinted by a single effort of memory or imagination, but answering all the purposes of detailed description, without its tediousness or its weakness. The President was 'drinking his wine in his town,' while Tecumseh and Harrison were fighting it out over the mountains. The Indians were hallooed upon the Americans, like a pack of starved hounds. The British nation was our great Father, and our great Father was laid flat on his back. So the policy of the United States, in extending their settlements, was a mighty water, and the scheme of common property in the tribes, was a dam to resist it.*

Tecumseh belonged to a nation 'noted,' as Mr. Heckewelder describes them, ' for much talk,' as well as for hard fighting; and he was himself never at a loss for words, though he used them with a chariness which might be imitated without disadvantage by some of our modern orators. It was only when he spoke for the explanation or vindication of that great cause to which his whole heart and mind were devoted, that he indulged himself in any thing beyond the laconic language of necessity. His appearance was always noble—his form symmetrical—his carriage erect and lofty—his motions commanding—but under the excitement of his favorite theme, he became a new being. The artifice of the politician, the diffidence of the stranger, the demure dignity of the warrior, were cast aside like a cloak. His fine countenance lighted up with a fiery and haughty pride. His frame swelled with emotion. Every posture and every gesture had its eloquent meaning. And then language, indeed,—the irrepressible outbreaking of nature,—flowed glowing from the passion-fountains of the soul.

* McAfee's History, p. 17.

We have drawn the portrait of this eminent chieftain hitherto, only so far as to sketch some of those strongly-marked lineaments by which he was best known to his contemporaries, and by which he will be longest remembered. But there was something more in his character than strong savage talent and savage feeling. Injured and irritated as he often was, and constantly as he kept himself excited by an interest in the fate of his countrymen, and by the agitation of his own schemes, there is no evidence either of coarseness in his manners, or of cruelty in his conduct. For reasons easily to be imagined, he regarded Governor Harrison with less partiality, than most other individual Americans; and hence, the British General is said to have stipulated early in the war, that the Governor, if taken prisoner, should be his captive. But he is understood to have always treated that gentleman with such courtesy, that we apprehend, had this casus-fæderis unfortunately occurred, he would have gloried only in conveying him off the battle-field in the manner of the Black-Prince. and in setting before him, with the royal munificence of Massasoit, all the dry pease in his wigwam.

When the Governor proposed to him, on his first visit to Vincennes in 1810, that, in the event of a war, he would as far as possible put a stop to the cruelies which the Indians were accustomed to inflict upos women and children, and others no longer in a situation to resist,—he readily gave his assent to the ition, and voluntarily pledged himself to ad-There is reason to believe, that he rememhis promise; and that amidst temptations and ations.—and, many would be inclined to add. les, from an authority he might have been supto respect,—of a most extraordinary nature. ne of the sorties from Fort Meigs, a hundred e of the American garrison were taken prisand put into Fort Miami. Here, McAfee there relate that the British Indians garnishsurrounding rampart, and amused themby loading and firing at the crowd within, or icular individuals. This proceeding is said to ontinued nearly two hours, during which time of the unfortunate prisoners were massacred. hiefs were at the same time holding a council. rmine the fate of the residue. A blood-thirsty f cut-throat Pottawatamies were warmly in fadespatching them all on the spot, while the dots and Miamies opposed that course. The r prevailed; and had already systematically enced the work of destruction, when Tecumescrying them from the batteries, came down them, reprimanded the ring-leaders for their lly barbarity in murdering defenceless capa cold blood, and thus saved the lives of a conole number. That all this was done by express ssion of the English commander, and in presof the English army, as is farther stated, it does long to us, in the pursuit of our present subither to assert or prove. If there be any truth charge, or in a tithe of those of the same charwhich have been brought against the same parsooner the veil of oblivion is dropped over the better.

fine, the character of Tecumseh, in whatlight it be viewed, must be regarded as reble in the highest degree. That he proved if worthy of his rank as a general officer in the of his Britannic Majesty, or even of his reputation as a great warrior among all the Indians of the North and West, is, indeed, a small title to distinction. Bravery is a savage virtue; and the Shawanees are a brave people, -as too many of the American nation have ascertained by experience. His oratory speaks more for his genius. It was the utterance of a great mind, roused by the strongest motives of which human nature is susceptible, and developing a power and a labor of reason, which commanded the admiration of the civilized, as justly as the confidence and pride of the savage. But other orators, too, have appeared among his countrymen, as eloquent and as eminent as Tecumseh, wherever the same moving causes and occasions could give birth and scope to the same emulous effort. And the mere oratory, in all these cases, was not so much an absolute vindication, as a naked and meagre index of the mighty intellect and noble spirit within. Happily for the fame of Tecumseh, other evidences exist in his favor,—such as were felt as well as heard in his own day,-such as will live on the pages of civilized history, long after barbarous tradition has forgotten them. He will be named with Philip and Pontiac, 'the agitators' of the two centuries which preceded his own. The schemes of these men were,-fortunately for the interest which they lived and labored to resist,-alike unsuccessful in their issue; but none the less credit should for that reason be allowed to their motives or their efforts. They were still statesmen, though the communities over which their influence was exerted, were composed of red men instead of white. They were still patriots, though they fought only for wild lands and for wild liberty. Indeed, it is these very circumstances that make these very efforts,-and especially the extraordinary degree of success which attended them,-the more honorable and the more signal; while they clearly show the necessity of their ultimate failure, which existed in the nature of things. They are the best proofs, at once, of genius and of principle.

CHAPTER XV.

MICHIKINAQWA, or the LITTLE TURTLE—Early History—Engages in a combination of the Indians against the United States—BLUE-JACKET—The Turtle defeats two detachments of American troops—Some account of the North-Western war from 1791 to 1795—The Turtle defeated by General Wayne—He becomes unpopular after the peace—Some of the charges against him examined—Anecdotes of his intercourse with distinguished Americans—His letter to Gen. Harrison—His death in 1812—His character.

In the Life of Buckongahelas, we have alluded to the powerful influence of 'one individual,' as having enabled Governor Harrison, despite the exertions of that chieftain, to effect the important negotiations concluded at Fort Wayne in 1803. That individual was the LITTLE TURTLE, a personage of both talent and celebrity, second in modern times only to those of Tecumseh. Indeed, he may be considered in some respects one of the most remarkable Indians of any age; and although he has been deceased about twenty years, his grave, in the neighborhood of the station just named, is not only still shown, but still visited by Indians from various quarters, who cherish the memory of the old warrior with the deepest veneration.

The vernacular name of the Turtle was MICHIKINAQWA or Mechecunaqua. He was the son of a Miami chief, but his mother was a Mohegan woman; and as the Indian maxim in relation to descents is generally the same with that of the civil law in relation to slaves—that the condition of the offspring follows the condition of the mother*—the Turtle had no advantage whatever from his father's rank. became a chief at an early age, for his talents attracted the notice of his country boyhood.

<sup>* &#</sup>x27; Partus sequitur ventrem.'

His first eminent services were those in the ranks of his tribe. It is well kno after the conclusion of the peace of 1783 retained possession of several posts with limits on the north, which were rallying-Indians hostile to the American cause they were supplied and subsisted to a con tent, while they continued to wage that which their civilized ally no longer maint Government made strenuous exertions these tribes. With some they succeeded others with the powerful Creeks, headed by the famous half-breed Mc'GILLIVE. savages of the Wabash and the Miami w to no terms. They were not only encou eign assistance—whether national, or sir ual, we need not in this connection discu were strong in domestic combination. dots, the Potawatamies, the Delawares, nees, the Chippewas, the Ottawas, not to a of some other tribes, all acted together: by no means least, the Miamies, resident Wayne has been since erected, inspired confederacy with the ardor which they had but to imitate in their own fearle

These were generally the same partithirty years before been united against under Pontiac; and the causes of their in now mainly the same as they had been the the cordiality and facility of cooperation very distribution of the confidence and experience deriver former failures. These causes have been ficiently experienced. They arose chie frontier advances of the white population lands—always and almost neces ded with provocations never discovered, never atoned for, by the proper authorities. claims were also brought forward, which, founded on the representations of persons inwere likely enough to be abuses. In fact, an exact precedent for the combination of The Turtle was politically the first fol-Pontiac, and the latest model of Tecumseh. Jurtle, we say, but the zealous assistance red from other chieftains of various tribes. it to be overlooked. Buckongahelas comthe Delawares. Blue-Jacket was at this leading man of the Shawanees-a warrior eputation, though unfortunately but few parf his history have been recorded. The Misa Canadian tribe on the river Credit, some of which still exists, contributed not a little wer of the confederacy in the talents of a ef, whose very name is not preserved, though ements among the more northern Indians on the banks of the St. Lawrence, as far Montreal itself.*

13th of September, 1791,—all attempts to the hostile tribes who were now ravaging ers, having been abandoned,—General Harriche direction of the Federal government, against them from Fort Washington (the ite of Cincinnati) with three hundred and gulars, who were soon after joined by a body, making the whole force about fifteen hunColonel Hardin, at the head of six huntucky troops, was detached in advance to re. As he approached the enemy's villages.

The villages were destroyed, and a light n detached in the pursuit. These men were small Indian party, led on by the Turtle, ectable Montreal publication, of 1791, notices s person's visits to the tribes in the vicinity of ;—describing him as "forty-five years old, six ight, of a sour and morose aspect, and appay orafty and subtle' who attacked them furiously, and fought them wi such effect, that of thirty regulars twenty-three we killed, while all the militia of the detachment soug safety in flight.

Notwithstanding this check, the enemy's only r maining town in the section of the country near t battle-ground was laid waste, and their provisions d General Harmer then returned to Fo Washington, unpursued, but disgraced and deep chagrined. Under these circumstances he resolve to hazard another action. He halted eight miles fro Chilicothe, and late at night detached Colonel Hard with orders to find the Indians, and fight them. He din succeeded in his search about daylight. The sa ages fought with desperation, for they were madden by the sight of their flaming villages and their unco ered dead, and the war-cry of the Turtle again urg them to the onset. Some of the Americans fled, b a greater number, including fifty regulars and or hundred militia, with several officers of note, fell up the field of battle, bravely discharging a fruitless at fatal duty. General Harmer claimed the victory. with how much propriety may appear from the facts. The Turtle however suffered so severely in t engagement, that he permitted him to march hor unmolested.

Harmer's disasters were followed by the most of plorable consequences, for the savages renewed the devastations to such a degree that the situation of t frontiers became truly alarming. Congress direct the organization of a strong military force, and met while two volunteer expeditions from Kentucky, under Generals Wilkinson and Scott, were fitted against the enemy. Considerable damage was do to them on the Miami and Wabash, though withough loss of life on either side.

The campaign of the Federal troops,—musteriabout two thousand, besides garrisons in two or the newly erected forts,—commenced late in the summ of 1791. Desertion reduced the number to fourte hundred, before the commander, General St. Clair, had advanced far into the hostile territory. Continuing his march, however, on the third of November he encamped on a piece of commanding ground, within fifteen miles of the Miami villages. An interval of only seventy paces was left between the two wings of his army. The right was in some degree protected by a creek, and a steep bank; the left, by cavalry and picquets. The militia, about three hundred fresh Kentuckian recruits, were permitted to cross the creek, and draw up in two lines on the first rising ground beyond it, at the distance of a quarter of a mile from the main body, from which they were separated also by a rich sugar-tree 'bottom.'

The enemy had apparently anticipated a movement of this kind. The chieftains had collected a force of from one thousand to fifteen hundred men, upon the Miami territorics; and for several days previous to the halt, numbers of them had been hovering round and evidently watching the movements of the troops. During the night of the 3d, shots were occasionally exchanged between them and the American senties, and small parties were sent out in different directions to prevent their too near approach.

Meanwhile the Indians were holding a grand council of war. The plan of attack was agreed upon, and the order and rank of the various tribes settled with precision as punctilious as that of the ancient Greeks. The Wvandots stretched to the west: the Delawares were stationed next to them; the Senecas third, and The Turtle, acting as commander-in-chief, uperintended and stimulated the whole, but headed no particular detachment; the arm of the warrior was to do much, but the eye and voice of the chieftain, much more. Nothing happened during the night to alarm the Americans, and indeed the noise and stir of the outskirts in the early part of the evening gradually subsided. All at length was silent, and it might well be supposed, as it probably was, that the enemy had taken advantage of the darkness of the night to make good a precipitate retreat, or that their whole force as yet consisted only of a few scouting and scalping parties. But the mistake was of short duration. The militia were violently attacked between dawn and sunrise of the fourth, by a powerful body of the Indians, who, with a terrific yell, poured in a volume of musketry along the entire length of the two lines. Never was surprise more complete. ranks of the militia were thrown into confusion at once; and although the battle was hotly contested for three hours at least, no efforts of the officers, or of the regular troops of the main body, proved sufficient to recover the lost ground. The former, indeed, were picked off by the enemy's sharp-shooters so rapidly, that very little could be expected from the aggregate of their exertions.

Besides, the savages generally fought under shelter of the woods. "The Indians were very numerous," we are informed by one who was present, "but we found it out more from their incessant heavy fire, than from what we could otherwise discover of them. They fought under cover, though they would frequently advance very close under the smoke of the cannon; and as soon as it began to clear away, the fire became very fatal."* Emboldened, however, by success, they sometimes charged the Americans tomahawk in hand, drove them back on their lines, kept possession of their tents for some minutes, and though repulsed, continually returned to the contest with redoubled fury.

The Americans were at length compelled to retreat; and this retreat,—as St. Clair himself confessed, in his despatches, "was a precipitate one, in fact a flight." The camp and artillery were abandoned. Most of the militia threw away their arms and accoutrements. All were closely pursued by the savages from half-past nine, when the route commenced, until after sunset, when they gained Fort Jefferson, at a distance of twenty-nine miles. Thirty-eight officers, and five hundred and ninety-three men, were slain or missing; and twenty-one officers and two hundred and fortytwo men wounded, many of whom died afterwards; so that no fewer than eight hundred and ninety-four were lost or disabled, out of an army of fourteen hundred. General Butler, second in command, was among the slain.

*New-York and other news-papers of December, 1791.

General St. Clair says he was overpowered by numbers: but as no English historian makes the enemy more numerous than the Americans, some credit should be given to them upon other grounds than the pretext of numerical superiority. Indeed, their attack was conducted with astonishing intrepidity. single volley of fire-arms they fought every inch of the field, hand to hand. There is no other instance in the history of the continent, of a slaughter to be compared to this, with the exception of the memorable defeat of Braddock. "Nearly in the space of three hundred and fifty yards,"-said General Scott, who visited the battle-field soon after,-"lay five hundred skull-bones, three hundred of which were buried by my men. From thence five miles on, the woods were strewed with skeletons, muskets," &c.* The loss of the Turtle's army was never ascertained upon indisputable authority, but no account makes it at all proportionable to that of St. Clair. The Mississaga chief, mentioned above, who visited Montreal a few months after the action, rated the American loss at several hundreds more than the official bulletin just cited, and that of the Indians at only nine; † but some allowance ought probably to be made for extenuation in the latter case, as for exaggeration in the former. An American officer, who encountered a party of thirty Indians near the battle-ground, a day or two after the defeat, (and was detained by them till they were made to believe him a friend to their cause, from Canada,) was informed that the number of killed was fifty-six.

&quot; Metcalf's Indian Wars.

These savages were returning home with their share of the plunder. One of them had a hundred and twenty-seven American scalps, strung on a pole, and the rest were laden with various other articles of different values. They had also three packhorses, carrying as many kegs of wine and spirits as could be piled on their backs. According to their statement, there were twelve hundred Indians in the battle, the larger proportion of whom were Miamies.*

In

bru

80.2

le

8

We have alluded to the expedition of General Scott, who made a most successful incursion against the savages a few weeks subsequent to the action of the 4th. A considerable body of them were found by his scouts on the field, still revelling among the spoils of the camp, and diverting themselves in high glee. Scott attacked them abruptly with three detachments, in as many directions, at the same moment. They were completely surprised and routed. At least two hundred were killed on the spot; the remainder fled, and Scott's force returned triumphantly to head-quarters, carrying home seven pieces of St. Clair's cannon.

The effect of this defeat upon the Turtle's mind and upon those of his countrymen generally, was abundantly sufficient to exasperate, without having the slightest tendency either to intimidate or discourage.

"A few days ago,"—says, in the summer of 1792, a letter-writer from Foat Knox, cited in the principal journals of the day,—"several chiefs came in from Opee, a place high upon the Illinois river, and in their speech to Major Hamtranck told him they were frequently invited and threatened by the Miamies, to induce them to go to war with us, that we must keep good heart, for we shall have a great many more to fight this year than last; and that they wished us success, hoped we should give them a hearty drubbing." nething is suggested about British instigation, and writer concludes thus. "Indeed every intellice we have received from the Miami villages, cororates this, so far as to convince us that there will wice as many Indians in the field this year as there e last,—so that I think a few of us will be apt to our hair."

* New-York papers. Most of the statements in the text are corroborated by all the standard histories of the war.

t will be observed that the Miamies are here reled as the leading tribe in the hostile combination. undoubtedly they were, and that alone sufficiently cates the influence exercised by the Turtle. Hence as, in no small degree, that the predictions of the ians at Fort Knox, were but too accurately and adily fulfilled. During 1792, the depredations of savages became more furious and ferocious than r before; and some of the most tragical scenes orded in history took place on the long line of the itiers. We shall detail a single well-authenticated ance, to illustrate the exposure of the citizens in at was then perhaps the most populous section of West.

dwelling-house in Kentucky was attacked by a ty of Indians. The proprietor, Mr. Merrill, was med by the barking of his dog. On going to door he received the fire of the assailants, which ke his right leg and arm. They attempted to or the house, but were anticipated in their moveit by Mrs. Merrill and her daughter, who closed door in so effectual a manner as to keep them at They next began to hew a passage through the r. and one of the warriors attempted to enter ough the aperture; but the resolute mother seizing exe, gave him a fatal blow upon the head, and then a the assistance of her daughter, drew his body His companions without, not apprized of his fate, supposing him successful, followed through the ie aperture, and four of the number were thus killbefore their mistake was discovered. They now red a few moments, but soon returned, and renewed their exertions to force the house. Despairi of entering by the door, they climbed upon the ro and made an effort to descend by the chimn Mr. Merrill directed his little son to empty the a tents of a large feather-bed upon the fire, which so caused so dense and pungent a smoke, as nearly suffocate those who had made this desperate attem and two of them fell into the fire-place. The n ment was critical; the mother and daughter could quit their stations at the door; and the husba though groaning with his broken leg and arm, ro ing every exertion, seized a billet of wood, and w repeated blows despatched the two half-smother Indians. In the meantime the mother had repel a fresh assault upon the door, and severely wound one of the Indians, who attempted simultaneously enter there, while the others descended the chi nev.*

We find no particular evidence that the Turtle v concerned in any of these petty forays, which inde were certainly attended with no honor, while they flicted more damage and alarm than any other eve of this memorable war. He however commander body of Indians who, in November, 1792, made a olent attack on a detachment of Kentucky volunter headed by Major Adair, (since Governor) under walls of Fort St. Clair. The contest was severe a sanguinary. The savages were at length repulsed with considerable loss, according to some account but Marshall, who is sufficiently careful of the hor of his countrymen, allows that the Major, after a g lant resistance, was compelled to retreat to the fe (about half a mile) with the loss of six men killed, a the camp-equipage and one hundred and forty par The Indians lost but two men. horses taken. Turtle was also in the action of Fort Recovery, whi took place in June, 1794, and in which a large detail

* Metcalf's Indian Wars.

ment of American troops, under Major Mc'Mahon, was defeated.

Repeated efforts were made by the American Government, during these three years, for the conclusion of a treaty of peace. Several of the Senecas, and other New-York Indians were employed as mediators to this end. To some extent they succeeded, or at least were thought to have done so,—it being announced, late in the fall of 1792, that the Miamies had consented to a truce till the next spring; but at the end of that term, if not before, hostilities were renewed with as much vigor as ever. Only a few months previous, three Americans, sent to the enemy with flags and proposals of peace, were murdered in cold blood,—an act for which some palliating provocations were alleged by those who committed it, but which never was deliberately justified by their leaders.*

But the successes of the enemy were drawing to a close. General Wayne had been appointed to the command of the American army, than whom perhaps no man in the country was better qualified to meet the emergencies of an Indian warfare in the woods. The Indians were themselves, indeed, sensible of this fact, and the mere intelligence of his approach probably had its effect on their spirits. They universally called him the BLACK SNAKE, from the superior cunning which they ascribed to him; and even allowed him the credit of being a fair match for Buckongahelas, Blue-Jacket, or the Turtle himself.

Wayne prosecuted the decisive campaign of 1794 with a spirit which justified the estimate of his enemy, although, owing to the difficulties of transporting stores and provisions through a wilderness whi at that time could not be traversed by wagons, was unable to commence operations until near mi summer. He had already, in the fall of the previo season, erected Fort Recovery on the site of St. Clai defeat; and early in August, he raised a fortificati at the confluence of the An-Glaize and Miami. whi he named Fort Deplance. His whole force was no nearly two thousand regulars, exclusive of eleven hu dred mounted Kentucky militia under General Scott Here he had expected to surprise the neighboring v lages of the enemy; and the more effectually to e sure the success of his coup-de-main, he had not on advanced thus far by an obscure and very diffici route, but taken pains to clear out two roads fro Greenville in that direction, in order to attract and a vert the attention of the Indians, while he march by neither. But his generalship proved of no ava The Turtle and his comrades kept too vigilant an e on the foe they were now awaiting, to be easily su prised, even had not their movements been quic ened, as they were, by the information of an America deserter.

*&quot; When the news was carried to the town (a Shawanese village) that a white man with a peace-talk had been killed at the camp, it excited a great ferment, and the murderers were much censured," &c.—Marshall's Kentucky. The brave Colonel Hardin, of Kentucky, was one of the messengers.

II.—Y

On the 12th of the month, the General learns from some of the Indians taken prisoners, that the main body occupied a camp near the British garriso at the rapids of the Miami. But he now resolve before approaching them much nearer, to try the effect of one more proposal of peace. He had in army a man named Miller, who had long been a car *There were some friendly Indians, mostly from sout ern tribes, who fought under Wayne and Scott durir the season of 1794; and among the rest about six Choctaws, commanded by a brave chief common called General Hummingerer, who more recently di tinguished himself in the last war against the Creeks, ( the allies of the British.) He died December 23d, 182 aged seventy-five, at his residence near the Chocta agency, where he was buried with the honors of war.

tive with some of the tribes, and he selected him for the hazardous enterprize.

Miller did not like the scheme. It was his opinion. from what he had observed, that the Indians were unalterably determined on war, and that they would not respect a flag, but probably kill him : in short, he declined being the ambassador. General Wayne, however, could think of no other as well qualified; and being anxious to make the experiment, he assured Miller that he would hold the eight prisoners then in his custody, as pledges for his safety, and that he might take with him any escort he desired. Thus encouraged. the soldier consented to go with the message; and to attend him, he selected from the prisoners, one of the men. and a squaw. With these he left camp at 4 o'clock. P. M. on the 13th; and next morning at daybreak, reached the tents of the hostile chiefs, which were near together, and known by his attendants, without being discovered. He immediately displayed his flag, and proclaimed himself "a messenger." Instantly he was assailed on all sides, with a bideous yell, and a call, to "Kill the runner! Kill the by!" But he, accosting them in their own language, and forthwith explaining to them his real character, hey suspended the blow, and took him into custody. He shewed and explained the General's letter; not mitting the positive assurance, that if they did not end the bearer back to him by the 16th of the month, ne would, at sunset of that day, cause every sollier in his camp to be put to death. Miller was closev confined, and a council called by the chiefs. he 15th, he was liberated, and furnished with an inswer to General Wayne, stating, "that if he waitad where he was ten days, and then sent Miller for hem, they would treat with him; but that if he advanced, they would give him battle." The General's mostionce had prevented his waiting the return of his minister. On the 16th, Miller came up with the army on its march, and delivered the answer; to which be added, that "from the manner in which the Indians were dressed and painted, and the constant arrival of parties, it was his opinion, they had determined on war, and only wanted time to muster their whole force."*

This intelligence of course did not serve to check the eagerness of the General, and he rapidly continued his march down the Miami. On the 18th he reached the rapids. On the 19th he halted to reconnoitre, within a few miles of the enemy's camp, and threw up a temporary work which he called Fort Deposite. Early in the morning of the 20th he resumed his march in that direction, and about 10 o'clock his spies, a mile in advance, were fired on. The army was halted, and put in order of battle, and then moved forward in three columns. Wayne's legion, occupying the right, had its flank upon the river; one brigade of mounted volunteers, under General Todd, occupied the left; and the other, under General Barbee, the rear. Major Price, with a select battallion, moved in front, to 'feel' the enemy, and to give the troops timely notice to form. After penetrating about five miles, he received a tremendous fire from an ambuscade, and fell back upon the main force.

The Indians were advantageously posted in the forest of Presqu'-Isle; having their left secured by the rocky bank of the river, and their front by a kind of breast-work of fallen trees, which rendered it impracticable for cavalry to advance. They were formed in three lines, within supporting distance, and exten-

C

P

١

C

ding nearly two miles into the woods.

Wayne's legion immediately advanced in two columns, with trailed arms, expecting to rouse the enemy from the covert with the bayonet; and when up, to deliver a close fire upon their backs, and press them so hard as not to give them time to reload. He soon saw, from the weight of their fire, and the extent of their lines, that the Indians were in full force, in possession of their favorite ground, and endeavoring to

* Marshall.

1 his left flank. He instantly ordered General Scott. h his whole force, to make a considerable circuit, h a view to outflank them; but the legionary intry executed their orders with such promptitude, t only a part of the second column, and of the unted volunteers, could be brought up to particie in the action. The Indians flying from their cealment, only confused each other by their nums; and they were driven more than two miles ough thick woods, in the course of an hour, until pursuit terminated under the guns of Fort Maue.* Great slaughter was made by the legionary alry in the pursuit, so many of the savages being down with the sabre, that the title of Long-Knives, g before given to the Americans, is said to have ne again into general use at this period. General tyne stated his loss at one hundred and thirty-three ed and wounded. That of the Indians was never ertained, but was supposed to be much greater. As many as seven tribes were engaged in this ion—the Miamies, the Potawatamies, Delawares, awanees, Chippewas, Ottawas, and some Senecas. ring the night preceding the battle, the chiefs the different nations had assembled in council. lit was proposed by some, to go up and attack neral Wayne in his encampment. The proposiwas opposed, and the council did not determine attack him that night; but all acceded to another gestion, to wait until the next day, and fight the neral at Presqu'-Isle. The Turtle alone disanved of this plan, while Blue-Jacket was warmly in or of it. The former disliked the idea of fighting syne under present circumstances, and was even inned to make peace. "We have beaten the eny," said he at the council, "twice, under separate nmanders. We cannot expect the same good fortune rays to attend us. The Americans are now led by hief who never sleeps. The night and the day are alike to him: and during all the time that he has been marching upon our villages, notwithstanding the watchfulness of our young men, we have never been able to surprise him. Think well of it. There is something whispers me, it would be prudent to listen to his offers of peace." On this, he was reproached by one of the chiefs with cowardice, and that ended the conference. Stung to the quick by a reproach which he was conscious he never merited, he would have laid the reviler dead at his feet; but his was not the bravery of an assassin. He took his post in the action, determined to do his duty; and the event proved that he had formed no very erroneous estimate of the character of General Wayne.*

Marshall. And see Appendix II.

The treaty of Greenville, consequent upon the successful termination of this campaign, or what is frequently denominated Wayne's War, was concluded on the third of August, A. D. 1795. This treaty, the basis of most of our subsequent treaties with the northwestern Indians, was attended by twelve tribes; some of whom, it is believed, had never before entered into treaty with the United States. They ceded an extensive tract of country, south of the lakes, and west of the Ohio; together with certain specific tracts, including the sites of all the northwestern posts, as an indemnification for the expenses of the war. The stipulations of the treaty of Greenville continued unbroken till the battle of Tippecanoe, a period of sixteen years.

Dawson, in his memoirs of General Harrison, (who was educated in General Wayne's family,) has given some interesting reminiscences respecting the conclusion of this peace. He states, that the Turtle took a decided part against the giving up of the large tract of country which General Wayne required on the part of the United States. This circumstance, however, was not unfavorable to the attainment of the object, as it was evident there was a violent jealousy of the Turtle, among most of the Ottawas, Chippewas, and Potawatamies, so that they invariably opposed every thing which he advocated. And as they and their friends constituted the majority of the council. the Turtle was always in the minority. superiority of his mind was conspicuous not only in their company, but in his measures and deportment in the society of white people. The other chiefs were all invited, in their turns, to the General's table. and on these occasions showed themselves still savages, though many of them appeared much at their ease, and disposed of the good things of the Gener-We table with evidentt satisfaction. The drinking. however, was the most popular part of the entertainment, and indeed, the White Pigeon, a Potawatamie chief, could not refrain from expressing his gratitude to the Great Spirit for this, as he conceived, the best rift to man. Upon being asked for a toast by General Wayne, he rose and said, "I will give you the Great Spirit, and I am much obliged to him for putting so much sense into that man's head who first made rum."

* Schoolcraft.

After the peace was concluded, the Turtle settled upon Eel-River, about twenty miles from Fort Wayne, where the Americans erected for him a comfortable house. He frequently visited the seat of Government both at Philadelphia and Washington. His taste for civilized life being observed, the Indian agents were desired by the Government to furnish him with every reasonable accommodation for his decent subsistence, —supposing that the example might prove beneficial in their exertions to civilize the other Indians.

These indulgences, however, entirely destroyed—for a time, at least—the Turtle's influence among the savages; for some envied his good fortune, and others suspected his honosty. Being perfectly sensible of this, and not a little chagrined by it, we may fairly presume that he made various attempts to recover his popularity. This was probably the secret of his opposition to the interest of the United States on more occasions than one where it was not altogether indispensable. But we certainly need not deny him on that account the credit of real patriotism which he manifested at all times. The truth is, that in some indifferent cases, when he might have yielded to the demands of the American authorities without dis grace, he opposed them chiefly for the sake of retaining or regaining his influence with his countrymen.

te

J

P

C

t

ĕ

iù

the

h:

93]

1/e

ķρ

top

h

be le

to

İ

Under these circumstances, however, he was of course liable to accusations which he did not deserve,—by the Indians, of being bribed by the Government, and by the Americans, of thwarting their purposes from a puerile regard to the whims rather than the interest of the Indians. As an instance of the latter, we may refer to the Indian Councils of 1802 and 1803, at Vincennes and at Fort Wayne, the result of which was the conveyance of an immense territory to the United States from the Potawatamies, Piankishaws, Weas, Eel-River Miamies, and some other tribes or parts of tribes.

Mr. Dawson states that the former of these councils had been recommended by the Turtle, but that when the time came, he refused to attend,-alleging as his reason, that "the jealousy with which the chiefs viewed the footing he stood upon with the United States, would make his presence rather more injurious than serviceable." Now, this would seem to be a sufficient explanation; and yet the historian does not hesitate to say, that the Turtle had just before been visited, bribed and gained over by the British-Indian agent, Mc'Kee. This is asserted without qualification, although the same paragraph shows that the testimony in the case was nothing more than the 'opinion' of a 'Mr. Wells.' It is added that, "however that might be"-implying a doubt after all-the Turtle certainly used his influence to prevent the other chiefs from attending the Council. This might be true, but it proves at best, only that he made some farther exertion to clear himself of that suspicion among the Indians which he gave as his reason for not attending been effectual in many cases. The Own name, was as subtle as he was control to the control to th suring them that the United States would at a future day claim a large tract of land for every annuity which they might pay to the Indians.

We have before mentioned that when Buckongahelas and other chiefs finally attended at Fort Wayne, and opposed the treaty, it was effected, according to the historian's statement, principally by the influence of the Turtle. It appears to have been on the whole a measure mutually beneficial to the two contracting parties; but the Turtle no doubt thought that an agreement once made should be ratified at all events, whatever the effect might be on his own popularity.

1 1100

¢

There is probably more justice in the charge brought against him in regard to the treaty concluded with the Piankashaws and Delawares, in 1804,—though perhaps not in the sense intended by the accuser. The Miamies were not consulted in this instance, it appears, nor were the Potawatamies. They believed themselves entitled to a voice in the matter, and were therefore dissatisfied, and openly expressed their displeasure at the result. It is alleged, however, that "no claim would have been set up by them, had the Turtle been consulted when the treaty was made."

This may be true,—for, setting aside courtesy, he and his countrymen might at least have been prepossessed in favor of the honesty of the transaction, by an appearance of entire frankness on the part of the whites. Not that the treaty was in fact unprincipled; but the manner of concluding it might well appear to the Indians somewhat exclusive. They claimed an interest in the lands conveyed, and a consequent right to be consulted as parties; and they wished that, even if the case admitted of no argument, they might be allowed to hear what was said, and to see what was done. Their anxiety was certainly the more pardonable, inasmuch as the tract thus conveyed included "all that fine country between the Ohio and the Wabash rivers (as high up as the road leading from Vincennes to Louisville,) with a front of three hundred miles on the one and nearly half as much on the other." It further appears, that at a general council of the tribes at Vincennes, in 1805, a treaty was negotiated, which "settled the dispute respecting the purchase made of the Delawares the year before,"—the Miamies and the other claimants being present. There was really a dispute, then—and it was settled—and that formally, by all the parties concerned. It should have been prevented, we conceive, instead of being settled; and in that case, the Turtle might have been spared the charge of 'manœuvring' and 'intriguing' with the British Agents.

He opposed the designs of Tecumseh and the Prophet, from the time of their first appearance on the political stage, and it was owing to his influence that very little was effected by them among the Miamies, as well as other tribes, for a long time. Had he lived through the war with England, he would undoubtedly have exerted himself more energetically for the American interest than ever before. The following communication indicates the part he was prepared to take, subsequent to the battle of Tippecanoe. The 'witness' probably acted as amanuensis:—

Fort Wayne, 25th January, 1812.

GOVERNOR HARRISON:

10

1

¥

*My friend—I have been requested by my nation to speak to you, and I obey their request with pleasure, because I believe their situation requires all the aid I can afford them.

When your speech by Mr. Dubois was received by the Miamics, they answered it, and I made known to you their opinion at that time.

Your letter to William Wells of the 23d November last, has been explained to the Miamies and Eel-

River tribes of Indians.

"My friend—Although neither of these tribes have had any thing to do with the late unfortunate affair which happened on the Wabash, still they all rejoice to hear you say, that if those foolish Indians which were engaged in that action, would return to the several homes and remain quiet, that they would be pardoned, and again received by the President as his children. We believe there is none of them that will be so foolish, as not to accept of this friendly offer; whilst, at the same time, I assure you, that nothing shall be wanting on my part, to prevail on them to accept it.

"All the prophet's followers have left him, (with the exception of two camps of his own tribe.) Tecumseh has just joined him with eight men only. No danger can be apprehended from them at present. Our eyes will be constantly kept on them, and should they attempt to gather strength again, we will do all in our power to prevent it, and at the same time give you immediate information of their intentions.

"We are sorry that the peace and friendship which has so long existed between the red and white people, could not be preserved, without the loss of so many good men as fell on both sides in the late action on the Wabash; but we are satisfied that it will be the means of making that peace which ought to exist between us, more respected, both by the red and the white people.

"We have been lately told, by different Indians from that quarter, that you wished the Indians from this country to visit you: this they will do with pleasure when you give them information of it in writing.

"My friend!—The clouds appear to be rising in a different quarter, which threatens to turn our light into darkness. To prevent this, it may require the united efforts of us all. We hope that none of us will be found to shrink from the storm that threatens to burst upon our nations.

Your friend,

MISCHECANOCQUAR, or LITTLE TURTLE.

41

el

4

had

F

elin

de de

10.0

25

le

PRO .

For the Miami and Eel-River tribes of Indians. Witness,

WM. TURNER, Surgeons Mate, U. S. Army.

I certify that the above is a true translation.

W. WELLS.

But the Turtle was destined to take no part in the conflict. He died at Fort Wayne—probably on a visit to the Commandant—July 14, 1812, of a disorder which the army surgeon announced to be the gout. He endured the pains of his disease, it is stated, with great firmness, and came to his death, on the turf of his open camp, with the characteristic composure of his race. His friend, the Commandant, buried him with the honors of war.

He was said to be sixty-five years of age, by those who had the opportunity of learning the fact from himself. That account would make him forty-five,—the same age with the Mississaga chieftain,—at the date of his great victory over St. Clair; and about thirty at the breaking out of the American Revolution, during which he no doubt laid the foundation of his fame. The Miamies are understood to have given as much trouble during that period as any other tribe on the continent ever did in as few years.

Mr. Schoolcraft, who speaks of the Turtle in very handsome terms, gives him the credit of doing at least as much as any other individual on the continent to sbolish the rites of human sacrifice." The existence, certainly the prevalence, of the custom apparently referred to here, is not, we apprehend, perfect ly well authenticated; but that circumstance itself may perhaps be attributed to the successful effort made in modern times to put an end to the practice. If the language we have quoted is intended to in clude generally all wanton destruction of life—sucl as torture of prisoners, for example—there can be little doubt of the justice of the praise, for the Turtle uniformly enjoyed the reputation of being as humans as he was brave.

Nor was this the only case in which he acted the part of a reformer, so much needed among his countrymen. He was the first man to originate an efficient system of measures for the suppression of intemperance among them. And never was a similar system so loudly called for the condition of any per II.—Z

ple. Their appetite for ardent spirits is stronger than that of the whites—owing in a great measure to their manner of living, and especially to their diet. They have also fewer and feebler inducements to counteract the propensity; and by public opinion and fashion—as expressed in common practice, and in the declarations of the leading men—they are confirmed in the evil quite as much as our citizens are restrained by similar causes. But worse than all, their ignorance, their indolence, and their poverty have made them the prey of legions of civilized scoundrels,—particularly traders in peltry,—who have supposed themselves interested in making them as sordid and stupid as possible, to induce them to hunt in the first instance, and to rob them of their furs in the second.

The Turtle was no less mortified than incensed by these abuses. He saw his countrymen destroyed and destroying each other every day in peace and no tribe was more besotted than the Eel-River Miamies-and he saw hundreds of them in war, at one time, surprised and massacred in their cups without resistance, on the very ground still red and vet with his victories. Possibly chagrin was as strong a motive with him as philanthrophy. But however that might be, he devoted himself with his usual energy to the correction of the evil. In 1802 or 1863. he went before the legislature of Kentucky, attended by his friend and interpreter, Captain Wells, and made his appeal to them in person. A committee was raised to consider the subject, and we believe a law passed to prevent the sale of whiskey to the Indians, as he desired. He also visited the Legislature of Ohio. and made a highly animated address, but in that case obtained nothing but the honor for his pains. His description of the traders was drawn to the life. "They stripped the poor Indians," he said, "of skins, gun, blanket, every thing,-while his squaw and the children dependent on him lay starving and shivering in his wigwam."*

* Mss. Documents.

From the following passage in the European (London) Magazine of April, 1802, compiled from American papers, we ascertain that the 'Turtle was also the first to introduce the practice of inoculation for the small pox among the Indians,—a scourge second only to the one just mentioned. "Last winter," we are told, "there was a grand embassy of Indians to the President and Congress at Washington. Little Turtle was the head-warrior. The President had supplied them with ploughs, spinning-wheels, &c. and to crown all he explained to them how the Great Spirit had made a donation to the white men—first to one in England, (Dr. Jenner) and then to one in America, (Dr. Waterhouse, of Boston,*)-of a means of preventing the small pox. Such a confidence had the copper-colored king in the words of his 'Father,' that he submitted to be inoculated, together with the rest of the warriors." It further appears that he took a quantity of vaccine matter home with him, which he probably administered in person; and that not long afterwards, fifteen more of his tribe visited the seat of government in pursuit of the same remedy.

We shall conclude our notice of this eminent chieftain, with a few anecdotes preserved by Mr. Dawson.

What distinguished him most, says that writer, was his ardent desire to be informed of all that relates to our institutions; and he seemed to possess a mind capable of understanding and valuing the advantages of civilized life, in a degree far superior to any other Indian of his time. "During the frequent visits which he made to the seat of government, he examined every thing he saw with an inquisitive eye, and never failed to embrace every opportunity to acquire information by inquiring of those with whom he could take that liberty."

Upon his return from Philadelphia, in 1797, he visited Governor Harrison, at that time a captain in the army, and commander at Fort Washington.

* Now of Cambridge.

He told the Captain he had seen many th he wished to have explained, but said he of giving offence by asking too many ques friend here," said he, meaning Captair interpreter, "being about as ignorant as n give me but little satisfaction." He then Captain to inform him how our governme ed, and what particular powers and dutie cised by the two houses of Congress, by dent, the Secretaries, &c. Being satisfied ject, he told the Captain he had become with a great warrior while in Philadelph fate he was much interested, and whose wished to learn. This was no other than tal Kosciusko: he had arrived at Philade time before, and hearing that a celebrated was in the city, he sent for him. They ally pleased with each other, and the I were often repeated. When he went to leave of the wounded patriot, the latter r Turtle with an elegant pair of pistols, ar robe made of the sea-otter's skin, worth dred dollars.

The Turtle now told his host that he much to know in what wars his friend I those grievous wounds which had rende crippled and infirm. The Captain shew a map of Europe the situation of Pola plained to him the usurpations of its ter neighboring powers—the exertions of I free his country from this foreign voketories—and his final defeat and captivity was describing the last unsuccessful batt usko, the Turtle seemed scarcely able to At the conclusion he traversed th great agitation, violently flourished the hawk with which he had been smoking. ed, "Let that woman take care of here ing the Empress Catharine—"this may gerous man!"

The Captain explained to the Turtle some anecdotes respecting the Empress and her favorites, one of whom,—the king of Poland,—had at first been by her elevated to the throne, and afterwards driven from it. He was much astonished to find that men, and particularly warriors, would submit to a woman. He said that perhaps if his friend Kosciusko had been a portly, handsome man, he might have better succeeded with her majesty of all the Russias, and might by means of a love-intrigue have obtained that independence for his country, to which his skill and valor in the field had been found unequal.

The Turde was fond of joking, and was possessed of considerable talent for repartee. In the year 1797, he lodged in a house in Philadelphia, in which was an Irish gentleman of considerable wit, who became much attached to the Indian, and frequently amused himself in drawing out his wit by good-humored The Turtle and this gentlemen were at that time both sitting for their portraits—the former by order of the President of the United States, the picture to be hung up in the war-office—to the celebrated Stewart. The two meeting one morning in the painter's room, the Turtle appeared to be rather more thoughtful than usual. The Irishman rallied him upon it, and affected to construe it into an acknowledgment of his superiority in the jocular contest. "He mistakes," said the Turtle to the interpreter, "I was just thinking of proposing to this man, to paint us both on one board, and here I would stand face to face with him, and confound him to all eternity."

ь

CHAPTER XVI.

The Seneca Chief, Red-Jacket—Circumstances which he succeeded Corn-Planter in his influer. Anecdotes of the latter—Red-Jacket's earliest or cal triumph—His speech at the Treaty of Came gua—Account of Farmer's-Brother, and Brained-Jacket's political and religious principles—Stom. Alexander, in 1811—Speech to Mr. Rickson—Remarks on the causes of his heathenism conduct of the whites—His military career—Sin favor of declaring war against the British, in —Seneca Manifesto—Red-Jacket's interview Washington—His interview with Lafayette—Himorial to the New-York Legislature—Speech to sionary in 1825—His deposition and restorati 1827—Visits to the Atlantic cities—Death and foobsequies—Anecdotes.

The Indian orator of modern times, par excess the New-York Chief, Saguoaha, or the Ke Awake, but by the whites commonly called Jacket;—a man who, with whatever propriemight be entitled 'the Last of the Senecas,' I least transiently renewed, in these latter days, the cient glory of the Mingoes. "Thy name is prin—a popular writer has said of him,— ——Though no poet's magic Could make Red-Jacket grace an English rhy Unless he had a genius for the tragic, And introduced it in a pantomime;

Yet it is music in the language spoken
Of thine own land; and on her herald-roll,
As nobly fought for, and as proud a token
As Cœur-de-Lion's of a warrior's soul.*

* Talisman for 1830.

This, by the way, is considerably nearer the truth han the statement in a preceding stanza:

Tradition's pages
Tell not the planting of thy parent tree;
But that the forest tribes have bent for ages,
To thee and to thy sires the subject knee.

Better historical, if not poetical authority informs s, that the Seneca literally 'fought' for his rank, if ot for his name; and that, like the subject of our set notice, he owed nothing to the advantages of ilestrious birth.* We should add, however, that the truggle was in the council-house as well as in the isld of battle. "A warrior!"—he once (and probably nore than once) had the modesty to say of himself, rith a smile of contempt, when some enquiries were nade respecting the deeds of blood which are sometimes supposed to constitute the character of an Inlian;—"A Warrior! I am an Orator. I was born an Orator!"

The predecessor of Red-Jacket, in the respect of he Senecas, and of the Confederacy at large, was a elebrated chief named by the English the Conn-LANTER, a personage also well known for his elegismence, and worthy on that account to be distinctly commemorated, were there on record any definite and well authenticated sketches of his efforts. Unfortustely, there are not. The speeches commonly astribed to him, are believed to have been mostly composed by some of his civilized acquaintances, rather on the principle of those effusions usually atributed to popular candidates for the gallows. Still, here is less reason, we apprehend, for doubting his eal genius, than for disputing his nationality. He considered himself a half-breed, his father being an

* Governor Clinton's Discourse before the New-York Historical Society: 1811.

f Appendix, III. and VI.

Indian, according to his own account, and his mother a white woman.

By a singular combination of circumstances, Red Jacket was brought forward into public life, and that to great advantage, mainly in consequence of the same incident which destroyed the influence of Com Planter. This, indeed, had been rather declining for some time, owing partly to his agency in effecting a large cession of Seneca land to the American Government, at the treaty of Fort Stanwix, in 1784. His loss of popularity, in fine, bitterly chagrined him, and he resolved on a desperate exertion to restore it. With this view, he undertook to practice upon the never-failing superstition of his countrymen, by persuading his brother to announce himself as a Prophet,-of course commissioned by the Great Spirit 'to redeem the fallen fortunes of his race,' -that is, his own.

The savages listened to the new pretender with all the veracious credulity which characterises the race. Among the Onondagas, previously the most drunken and profligate of the Six Nations, he acquired such an ascendancy, as to induce them to abandon the use of spirituous liquors entirely, and to observe the common laws of morality and decency in some other respects, wherein they had before been grievously deficient. Indeed, among the Confederates generally, he obtained a supremacy equal to that of the same character obtained by Elskwatawa among the western tribes, not far from the same time. The Oneidas alone rejected him.

Like that notorious impostor, too, he soon availed himself, for evil purposes, of the confidence gained by the preliminary manifestation of good. A cry of 'witchcraft' was raised, and a sort of examining committee of conjurors was selected to designate the offenders. And that duty was zealously discharged. The victims were actually sentenced, and would toubtless have been executed, but for the interference magistrates of Oneida and the officers of the at Niagara.

either the Corn-Planter nor his pious coadjuyet discouraged. Nothing but an accident rented success, and the failure only made it re imperatively necessary to try the experimin. Red-Jacket was publicly denounced. asers came forward at a great Indian council Busfalo Creek. "At this crisis," says an emiiter. "he well knew that the future color of lepended upon the powers of his mind. He his defence for near three hours. The iron superstition relented under the magic of his ze: he declared the Prophet an impostor and he prevailed; the Indians divided, and a ajority appeared in his favor. Perhaps the f history cannot furnish a more conspicuous of the triumph and power of oratory, in a is nation, devoted to superstition, and looking e accuser as a delegated minister of the Alanecdote be true,—and we are not aware of ng been doubted,—the Orator, whatever be its genius as such, hardly deserved the precise ent which is paid him by his eulogist in "Is eloquence," he asks, "a monarch's merit?"

——Her spell is thine that reaches heart, and makes the wisest head its sport, here's one rare, strange virtue in thy speeches, secret of their mastery—they are short.

ne Seneca's case, it must be allowed, was one compulsion; and he probably felt, on the ocaquestion, very little of the impatience which Horne Tooke to say, after a noble friend's eleven hours in his behalf before the Comnat "he would rather be hanged, another time, ended."

* Discourse of Governor Clinton.

Such was the Orator's first triumph. I however, his first effort; for many years I transaction just referred to, as we supp Red-Jacket was probably about thirty year and at a period when our relations with all t are well known to have been continually we a treaty was held with the Six Nations on t ful acclivity which overlooks the Canandai Some reminescences of it, bearing a high have reached us, on the authenticity of when the sitate to rely.

"Two days," says our authority, " " had pa in negotiation with the Indians for a cessic lands. The contract was supposed to be no pleted, when Red-Jacket arose. With the dignity of a Roman senator, he drew hi around him, and, with a piercing eye, sur multitude. All was hushed. Nothing into break the silence, save the gentle rustling o tops, under whose shade they were gathere a long and solemn, but not unmeaning pause menced his speech in a low voice and a se style. Rising gradually with his subject, he the primitive simplicity and happiness of h and the wrongs they had sustained from th tions of white men, with such a bold but fai cil, that every auditor was soon roused to v or melted into tears.

The effect was inexpressible. But ere tions of admiration and sympathy had sub white men became alarmed. They were in of an Indian country, surrounded by more times their number, who were inflamed by the remembrance of their injuries, and excited to indignation by the eloquence of a favorite chief. Appalled and terrified, the white men cast a cheerless gaze upon the hordes around them. A nod from the chiefs might be the onset of destruction. At that portentous moment, Farmer's-Brother interposed. He replied not to his brother chief; but, with a sagacity truly aboriginal, he caused a cessation of the council, introduced good cheer, commended the eloquence of Red-Jacket, and, before the meeting had re-assembled, with the aid of other prudent chiefs, he had moderated the fury of his nation to a more salutary review of the question before them."

* The writer of a communication on 'Indiphy,' for the New-York American, about since. We give him credit for his statement though we cannot concur with him in char Jacket with 'cowardice.' He adds, "It was 'Council-fire' he shone pre-eminent. There, was great. The belittling simplicity of his not seem to detract from the spletdors of his end.

The council came together again in cooler blood, and the treaty was concluded. The Western District at this day, it is added, "owes no small portion of its power and influence to the councils of a savage, in comparison with whom for genius, heroism, virtue, or any other quality that can adorn the bauble of a diadem, not only George the IV. and Louis le Desiré, but the German Emperor and the Czar of Muscovy, alike dwindle into insignificance."

This somewhat warmly expressed compliment, the extravagance of which in an old friend of the subject, may be excused in its good feeling,—reminds us of the consideration really due to a man distinguished not alone as a competitor with our hero for savage glory.

Except as related to oratory, he was a competitor in the same course. The name of Farmer's-Brother was merely arbitrary. He was a warrior in principle and in practice, and he spurned agriculture and every other civilized art, with the contempt of Red-Jacket himself. In the war between France and England, which resulted in the conquest of Canada, he fought against the latter, and probably under the remote command of the great Ottawa 'Emperor' of the north. One of his exploits in the contest is still told to the traveller who passes a noted stream not very far from the ancient Fort Niagara, in the vicinity of which it occurred. The particulars come to us authenticated by one to whom they were furnished by the Farmer himself on the site of the adventure.

There, with a party of Indians, he lay in ambush, patiently awaiting the approach of a guard that accompanied the English teams employed between the falls of Niagara and the garrison, which had there lately surrendered to Sir William Johnston. The place selected for that purpose is now known by the name of the Devil's Hole, and is three and a half miles below the famous cataract upon the American side of the strait. The mind can scarcely conceive a more dismal looking den. A large ravine, occasioned by the falling in of the perpendicular bank, made dark by the spreading branches of the birch and cedar, which had taken root below, and the low murmuring of the rapids in the chasm, added to the solemn thunder of the cataract itself, conspire to render the scene truly awful. The English party were not aware of the dreadful fate that awaited them. Unconscious of danger, the drivers were gaily whistling to their dull ox-teams. Farmer's-Brother and his band, on their arrival at this spot, rushed from the thicket that had concealed them, and commenced horrid butchery. So unexpected was such an event, and so completely were the English disarmed of their presence of mind, that but a feeble resistance was The guard, the teamsters, the oxen and the waggons, were precipitated into the gulf. of them escaped; a Mr. Stedman, who lived at Schioper, above the falls, being mounted on a fleet horse, made good his retreat; and one of the soldiers, who was caught on the projecting root of a cedar, which sustained him until assured, by the distant yell of the savages, that they had quitted the ground.-It is the rivulet, pouring itself down this precipice, whose name is the only monument that records the massaIt is said to have been literally colored with blood of the vanquished.

n the Revolutionary War, Farmer's-Brother need his hostility to the Americans upon every ocion that presented itself; and, with the same zeal, engaged in the late war against his former friends, English.

Inother anecdote of this Chief will show, in more wing colors, the real savage. A short time before army crossed the Niagara, Farmer's-Brother nced to observe an Indian, who had mingled with Senecas, and whom he instantly recognized as onging to the Mohawks, a tribe living in Canada. then employed in the service of the enemy. He it up to him, and addressed him in the Indian gue—"I know you well—you belong to the Movks-you are a spy-here is my rifle-my tomark-my scalping-knife. I give you your choice ch I shall use, but I am in haste." The young rjor, finding resistance vain, chose to be put to th with a rifle. He was ordered to lie down upthe grass, while, with his left foot upon the breast he victim, the Chief lodged the contents of his rifle is head.

Vith so much of the savage, Farmer's-Brother posed some noble traits. He was as firm a friend ere he promised fidelity, as a bitter enemy to those inst whom he contended; and would lose the last p of blood in his veins sooner than betray the se he had espoused. He was fond of recounting exploits, and dwelt with much entisfaction upon number of scalps he had taken in his skirmishes h the whites. In company with several other efa, he once paid a visit to General Washington, o presented him with a silver medal. This he istantly wore suspended from his neck; and so cious did he esteem the gift, that he was often and to declare he would lose it only with his life. Boon after the battles of Chippewa and Bridgewa-, this veteran warrior paid the debt of nature, aged I.—A a more than eighty years, at the Seneca village, where, a a mark of respect for his distinguished bravery, the fifth regiment of United States Infantry interred him

with military honors.*

Another elder contemporary of Red-Jacket wa the Mohawk chief BRANDT, 'the accursed Brandt' Gertrude of Wyoming, whom, however, we think the less necessary to notice at much length, from h being, like the Corn-Planter, only a half-breed. the French and English war, he rendered some se vices to the former. In the Revolution, he was con missioned Colonel in the English army, and disti guished himself in the horrid massacre at Wyomin His services were rewarded by the present of a fin tract of land on the western shores of Lake Ontari One of his sons, an intelligent, high-minded ma quite civilized, and much esteemed by his America acquaintances, a few years since laudably undertoo the vindication of his father's memory from the offer repeated charges of treachery and cruelty, but y apprehend with rather more zeal than success. The father deceased in 1807; the son, only a month two since.*

To return to Red-Jacket. After his first orator triumph, he rose as rapidly as the Corn-Planter clined in the esteem of his countrymen. The k withdrew from the rivalry,† but the ambition of his cessor was thoroughly aroused. He burned to and to be called, the Great Speaker of his nation his age; to renew that glorious era when the men trembled at the breath of Garangula; to fe to make felt

The monarch mind—the mystery of command The godlike power—the art Napoleon, Of winning, fettering, moulding, wielding, the The hearts of millions, till they move like

* See VILLAGE REGISTER, AMERICAN, and or York papers of about 1820.—Also, Appendix, † The Prophet died in 1815

And he succeeded as far perhaps as could be expected in the circumstances of the modern Seneca, as compared with those of the orator who bearded the Canadian lion in his den. More than a century had since elapsed, during which the proud confederacy that had kept all other nations on the continent at bay was reduced to a few lingering, scattered settlements,—surrounded and crowded by civilization, perhaps besotted in vice,—where the very ground of their ancient council-halls scarcely was sought for. With such discouragements in his way, the young Orator deserves some credit for making the exertions he did, and his countrymen for rewarding them as they were able. They elected him a chief; and then upon all occasions obeyed him in peace, and followed him in war.

Red Jacket justified their confidence by a strict adherence to principles which on the whole are equally creditable to his heart and head, although either the policy itself, or his singular pertinacity in maintaining it, no doubt made him many adversaries and some enemies, even with his own people. He had early reflected upon and felt deeply the impotent insignificance to which the tribes were reduced;—and he resolved, if he could not restore them to their primitive position, at least to stay the progress of ruin. How should this be done,—was the great question,—by receiving civilization, or by resisting it?

He determined on the latter alternative, and from that hour never in the slightest degree swerved from his resolution to drive away and keep away every innovation on the character, and every intrusion on the character, and every intrusion on the territory of the nation. Traders, travellers, teachers, missionaries, speculators in land, were regarded with the same jealousy. In a word, he labored against circumstances whose force had now become inevitable and irresistable, to maintain a system of complete Indian Independence, which few of his countrymen understood, and still fewer were willing to practice.

And this is the trait which distinguishes his character from the majority of those we have heretofore sketched. Some of the most eminent of the number, like Pontiac and Little-Turtle, were anxious to avail themselves of the arts of civilization at least, were it only for purposes of offence and defence against the race whom they borrowed from; and scarcely any were opposed, other than incidentally, to their introduction into Indian use. But Red-Jacket was a Pagan in principle. He advocated as well as acted Paganism on all occasions. He was prouder of his genuine Indianism, if possible, than he was of his oratory. His bitterest foe could not deny him the merit of frankness.

One of his clearest manifestoes, in explanation of his system, was delivered as long ago as May, 1811, before a council of the Senecas, held at Buffalo Creek, in the form of a speech to the Rev. Mr. Alexander, a missionary from a Society in the city of New York, whose commission the address itself sufficient.

ly explains.

"Brother!"—the Orator began, with a complaisance which never, under any excitement, deserted him,—"Brother!—We listened to the talk you delivered to from the Council of Black-Coats,* in New-Yor We have fully considered your talk, and the office you have made us. We now return our answ which we wish you also to understand. In mak up our minds, we have looked back to remen what has been done in our days, and what our fers have told us was done in old times.

"Brother!—Great numbers of Black-Coats been among the Indians. With sweet voices smiling faces, they offered to teach them the re of the white people. Our brethren in the East ed to them. They turned from the religion of fathers, and took up the religion of the white

* His usual designation of Clergymen.

ood has it done? Are they more friendly one ier than we are? No, Brother! They are a people;—we are united. They quarrel about;—we live in love and friendship. Besides, ink strong waters. And they have learned cheat, and how to practice all the other vices white people, without imitating their virtues. !—If you wish us well, keep away; do not ther!—We do not worship the Great Spirit as e people do, but we believe that the forms of are indifferent to the Great Spirit. It is the of sincere hearts that pleases him, and we him in that manner.

ording to your religion, we must believe in a and Son, or we shall not be happy hereafter. a always believed in a Father, and we worn as our old men taught us. Your book says Son was sent on earth by the Father. Did eople who saw the Son believe him? No! not. And if you have read the book, the ence must be known to you.

her!—You wish us to change our religion for We like our religion, and do not want another friends here, [pointing to Mr. Granger, the gent, and two other whites,*] do us great they counsel us in trouble; they teach us how nfortable at all times. Our friends the Quanore. They give us ploughs, and teach us use them. They tell us we are accountable. But they do not tell us we must change our—We are satisfied with what they do, and it they say.

ner!—For these reasons we cannot receive rs. We have other things to do, and beg nake your mind easy, without troubling us, adian Interpreter, and an Agent of the Society is for improving the condition of the Indians.

A 8 2

lest our heads should be too much loaded, and by and by burst."

At the same Council, the following reply was made by Red-Jacket, in behalf of his tribe, to the application of a Mr. Richardson, to buy out their right to the reservations lying in the territory commonly called the Holland Purchase.

"Brother!—We opened our ears to the talk you lately delivered to us, at our council-fire. In doing important business it is best not to tell long stories, but to come to it in a few words. We therefore shall not repeat your talk, which is fresh in our minds. We have well considered it, and the advantages and disadvantages of your offers. We request your attention to our answer, which is not from the speaker alone, but from all the Sachems and Chiefs now around our council-fire.

"Brother!—We know that great men, as well as great nations, have different interests and different minds, and do not see the same light—but we hope our answer will be agreeable to you and your employers.

"Brother!—Your application for the purchase of our lands is to our minds very extraordinary. It has been made in a crooked manner. You have not walked in the straight path pointed out by the great Council of your nation. You have no writings from your great Father, the President. In making up our minds we have looked back, and remembered how the Yorkers purchased our lands in former times. They bought them, piece after piece,—for a little money paid to a few men in our nation, and not to all our brethren,—until our planting and hunting-grounds have become very small, and if we sell them, we know not where to spread our blankets.

"Brother!—You tell us your employers have purchased of the Council of Yorkers, a right to buy our lands. We do not understand how this can be The lands do not belong to the Yorkers; they are ours, and were given to us by the Great Spirit.

"Brother!—We think it strange that you should jump over the lands of our brethren in the East, to come to our council-fire so far off, to get our lands. When we sold our lands in the East to the white people, we determined never to sell those we kept, which are as small as we can comfortably live on.

"Brother!—You want us to travel with you and look for new lands. If we should sell our lands and move off into a distant country towards the setting sun, we should be looked upon in the country to which we go, as foreigners and strangers. We should be despised by the red, as well as the white men, and we should soon be surrounded by the white people, who will there also kill our game, and come upon our lands and try to get them from us.

"Brother!—We are determined not to sell our lands, but to continue on them. We like them. They are fruitful, and produce us corn in abundance for the support of our women and children, and grass and herbs for our cattle.

"Brother!—At the treaties held for the purchase of our lands, the white men, with sweet voices and smiling faces, told us they loved us, and that they would not cheat us, but that the king's children on the other side of the lake would cheat us. When we go on the other side of the lake, the king's children tell us your people will cheat us. These things puzzle our heads, and we believe that the Indians must take care of themselves, and not trust either in your people, or in the king's children.

"Brother!—At a late council we requested our agents to tell you that we would not sell our lands, and we think you have not spoken to our agents, or they would have told you so, and we should not have met you at our council-fire at this time.

"Brother!—The white people buy and sell false tights to our lands, and your employers have, you say, paid a great price for their rights. They must have a plenty of money, to spend it in buying false rights to lands belonging to Indians. The loss of it will not hurt them, but our lands are of great value to us, and we wish you to go back with our talk to your employers, and tell them and the Yorkers that they have no right to buy and sell false rights to our lands.

"Brother!—We hope you clearly understand the ideas we have offered. This is all we have to say."

It is not surprising that Red-Jacket should misunderstand, or not understand at all, the right to buy Indian land, which Richardson said his employers had obtained of the 'Council of Yorkers.' It was the right of preemption, in plain English—by which better read jurists than the Seneca have been perplexed. He naturally enough mistook the 'right' of the State for a right, whereas it amounted to nothing but the privilege of preventing all other parties from acquiring a right. It was a prerogative—as against the whites alone—the legal effect of which was to incapacitate, not the Indians from selling, but themselves from buving.

There certainly can be no mistaking the shrewd independent reflection and plausible reasoning in the address, however much the perversion of such ability and spirit may give occasion for regret. Several of the arguments, too, are clearly founded in reason, as several of the statements are fortified by truth. In regard to the Indians being cheated by the whites, particularly, the only error of Red-Jacket, and that a perfectly obvious one, was in ascribing to the whites at large, and consequently to Christianity, the credit which in fact belonged to a few unprincipled traders and greedy speculators in land, who had indeed carried their manœuvres to an aggravated extent.

There is good reason to believe that Red-Jacket,— whose military career it is time to allude to,—took his earliest lessons in the art of war during the Revolu-

he ranks of those Senecas who so signally shed themselves by their ravages on the of New-York, Pennsylvania, New-Jersey inia.* The only reference, however, which nimself made to that part of his history, so know, was latterly at Buffalo, when he was ed to General Lafayette, then on his tour the country. He reminded the latter of a at Fort Stanwix in 1784, where both were and which had been called with the view of ng a treaty with some of the Six Nations. here," asked Lafayette, "is the Young Warso eloquently opposed the burying of the rk? "He is before you," answered the chief. -he added with a melancholy air, and stripa handkerchief from his bald head.—"Time e bad work with me. But you, I perceive," ere he narrowly reconnoitered the General's You have hair enough left yet!" At the this interview, seven years since, he was at ty-five years of age, and therefore must in about twenty-five at the time of the treaty. years subsequent to the negotiation referred s occasion, Red-Jacket had an interview with Washington, who gave him a silver medal, e wore ever afterwards, and is said to have im 'the Flower of the Forest.' But the Seneagain hostile soon afterwards, and it was only pense of an expedition which ravaged their far and wide, that this haughty people ength subdued into any thing like a state of Red-Jacket is believed to have been o none of his countrymen in his opposition merican interest down to that period: but a as granted upon liberal terms-some comf the Indians were adjusted—a system of on was devised for their benefit—and thenceth they and he were quite friendly in most instances, and faithful to their engagements in

No. VII. † Levasseur's 'Tour of Lafayette.'

As early at least as 1810, Red-Jacket gave information to the Indian Agent of attempts made by Tecumseh, the Prophet and others, to draw his nation into the great western combination; but the war of 1812 had scarcely commenced, when they volunteered their services to their American neighbors. For some time these were rejected, and every exertion was made to induce them to remain neutral. the restraint with an ill-grace, but said nothing. At length, in the summer of 1812, the English unadvisedly took possession of Grand Island, in the Niagara river, a valuable territory of the Senecas. too much for the pride of such men as Red-Jacket and Farmer's-Brother. A council was called forthwith-the American Agent was summoned to attend-and the orator rose and addressed him.

"Brother!"—said he, after stating the information received,—"you have told us we had nothing to do with the war between you and the British. But the war has come to our doors. Our property is seized upon by the British and their Indian friends. It is necessary for us, then, to take up this business. We must defend our property; we must drive the enemy from our soil. If we sit still on our lands, and take no means of redress, the British, following the customs of you white people, will hold them by conquest; and you, if you conquer Canada, will claim them, on the same principles, as conquered from the British. Brother!—We wish to go with our warriors, and drive off these bad people, and take possession of those lands."

The effect of this reasonable declaration, and especially of the manner in which it was made, was such as might be expected. A grand council of the Six Nations came together, and a manifesto, of which the following is a literal translation, issued against the

tr

in Canada, and signed by all the grand Counof the Confederation.

, the Chiefs and Councillors of the Six Na-Indians, residing in the State of New-York, sby proclaim to all the war-chiefs and warrihe Six Nations, that war is declared on our ainst the provinces of Upper and Lower Can-efore, we do hereby command and advise all-chiefs to call forth immediately the warriors hem, and put them in motion to protect their nd liberties, which our brethren, the Americans r defending."* peech of Red-Jacket at this memorable meethe tribes is preserved, but from the address of the oldest warriors it appears that they exto raise as many as three thousand fighting-But this must be an exaggeration. In 1817, vere supposed to be only seven thousand of all descriptions within the State of Newn a liberal estimate, and the usual proportion iors would be in that case about two thousand. probable that more than half this number were organized for service at any period during .-Those who engaged, however, cannot be l of want of zeal, for although the Declaration de quite late in 1812, we find a considerable them taking a spirited part in an action near eorge, of which an official account was given eral Boyd, under date of August 13th. The were completely routed, and a number of Indians captured by our allies. ose," adds the General, "who participated in itest, particularly the Indians, conducted with ravery and activity. General Porter volunin the affair, and Major Chapin evinced his accustomed zeal and courage. The regulars under Major Cummings, as far as they were engaged, conducted well. The principal chiefs who led the warriors this day, were Farmers-Brother, Red-Jacket, Little-Billey, Pollard, Black-Snake, Johnson, Silver-Heels, Captain Halftown, Major Henry O. Ball, (Corn-planter's son,) and Captain Cold, who was wounded. In a council which was held with them yesterday, they covenanted not to scalp or murder; and I am happy to say that they treated the prisoners with humanity, and committed no wanton cruelties on the dead.

* Niles's Register, Vol IV.

Of the chiefs here mentioned, we believe all were Senecas, except Captain Cold. The General repeats, in his next bulletin,-"The bravery and humanity of the Indians were equally conspicuous;" and another authority says,-" They behaved with great gallantry and betrayed no disposition to violate the restrictions which Boyd has imposed." These restrictions,—it should be observed in justice to Red-Jacket and his brave comrades,-had been previously agreed upon at the Grand Council, and the former probably felt no humiliation in departing in this particular from the usual savagery on which he prided himself. We have met with no authentic charges against him, either of cruelty or cowardice, and it is well known that he took part in a number of sharply contested engagements.

After the conclusion of peace, he resumed, with his accustomed energy, the superintendance of the civil interests of the Senecas. The division of the tribe into parties,—the Christian and Anti-Christian,—was now completely distinct: the former being headed by Little-Billey, Captain Pollard, and other noted chiefs and the latter by Red-Jacket, with young Corn-plante and several more spirited assistants, whose name are appended to the following memorial to the Governor of New-York. This was the composition of

* Niles's Register.

Red-Jacket. It had been preceded by a private letter from himself to the Governor, which had probably produced little or no effect.

"To the Chief of the Council-fire at Albany. "Brother!

"About three years ago, our friends of the great council-fire at Albany, wrote down in their book that the priests of white people should no longer reside on our lands, and told their officers to move them off whenever we complained. This was to us good news, and made our hearts glad. These priests had a long time troubled us, and made us bad friends and bad neighbors. After much difficulty we removed them from our lands; and for a short time have been quiet and our minds easy. But we are now told that the priests have asked liberty to return; and that our friends of the great council-fire are about to blot from their book the law which they made, and leave their poor red brethren once more a prey to hungry priests.

"Brother!-Listen to what we say. These men do us no good. They deceive every body. deny the Great Spirit, which we, and our fathers before us, have looked upon as our Creator. They disturb us in our worship. They tell our children they must not believe like our fathers and mothers, and tell us many things that we do not understand and cannot believe. They tell us we must be like white people—but they are lazy and wont work, nor do they teach our young men to do so. The habits of our women are worse than they were before these men came amongst us, and our young men drink more whiskey. We are willing to be taught to read, and write, and work, but not by people who have done us so much injury. Brother!—we wish you to lay before the council-fire the wishes of your red brethren. We ask our brothers not to blot out the law which has made us peaceable and happy, and not to force a strange religion upon us. We ask to be let II.—Bb alone, and, like the white people, to worship the Great Spirit as we think it best. We shall then be happy in filling the little space in life which is left us, and shall go down to our fathers in peace."

This unique document was subscribed with the mark of Red-Jacket first, and then followed those of Corn-Planter, Green-Blanket, Big-Kettle, Robert Bob, Twenty-Canoes, senior and junior, Two-Guns, Fish-Hook, Hot-Bread, Bare-Foot, and many other staunch advocates of the same principles. It was presented to the Assembly, but we have not learned that any efficient order was taken upon it. About the same time, Red-Jacket made an earnest appeal to his Quaker neighbors,—a people always beloved by the Indians, —with the same design. He told them that those whites who pretended to instruct and preach to his people, stole their horses and drove off their cattle, while such of the Senecas as they nominally converted from heathenism to christianity, only disgraced themselves by paltry attempts to cover the profligacy of the one with the hypocrisy of the other.

The Pagans were generally opposed to the cession of land, but foreign influence, united with that of their antagonists at home, sometimes proved too strong for them. At a treaty held with the tribe in 1826, eighty-two thousand acres of fine territory were given up. Red-Jacket opposed the measure in an eloquent appeal to the Indian feelings of his countrymen, but the effort gained him but few votes.

The speech which has perhaps added most to his reputation was a thoroughly Pagan one, delivered not long previous to the affair just mentioned to a council at Buffalo, convened at the request of a missionary from Massachusetts, with the view of introducing and recommending himself to them in his religious capacity. The Missionary made a speech to the Indians, explaining the objects for which he had called them together. It was by no means, he said, to get away their lands or money. There was but one religion, and without that they could not prosper. They had lived all their lives in gross darkness. Finally he wished to hear their objections, if any could be made; and the sooner, the better, inasmuch as some other Indians whom he had visited, had resolved to reply to him in accordance with their decision.

* Niles's Register, Vol. XXVIII: 1828.

At the close of this address, the Senecas spent sev eral hours in private conference, and then Red-Jacke came forward as speaker. ·

"Friend and Brother!"—he began—"It was the will of the Great Spirit that we should meet together this day. He orders all things, and he has given us a fine day for our council. He has taken his garment from before the sun, and caused it to shine with brightness upon us. Our eyes are opened that we see clearly. Our ears are unstopped that we have been able to hear distinctly the words you have spoken. For all these favors we thank the Great Spirit, and him only.

"Brother!—This council fire was kindled by you. It was at your request that we came together at this time. We have listened with attention to what you have said. You requested us to speak our minds freely. This gives us great joy, for we now consider that we stand upright before you, and can speak what we think. All have heard your voice, and all speak to you as one man. Our minds are agreed.

"Brother!—You say you want an answer to your talk before you leave this place. It is right you should have one, as you are a great distance from home, and we do not wish to detain you. But we will first look back a little, and tell you what our fathers have told us, and what we have heard from the white people.

"Brother!—Listen to what we say. There was a time when our forefathers owned this great island."

* Meaning the Continent—a common belief and expression among the Indians.

Their seats extended from the rising to the setting The Great Spirit had made it for the use of Indians. He had created the buffalo, the deer, and other animals for food. He made the bear and the beaver, and their skins served us for clothing. He had scattered them over the country, and taught us how to take them. He had caused the earth to produce corn for bread. All this he had done for his red children because he loved them. If we had any disputes about hunting-grounds, they were generally settled without the shedding of much blood. But an evil day came upon us. Your forefathers crossed the great waters, and landed on this island. Their numbers were small. They found friends and not enemies. They told us they had fled from their own country for fear of wicked men, and come here to enjoy their religion. They asked for a small seat. We took pity on them, granted their request, and they sat down amongst us. We gave them corn and meat. They gave us poison* in return. The white people had now found our country. Tidings were carried back, and more came amongst us. Yet we did not fear them. We took them to be friends. They called us brothers. We believed them, and gave them a larger seat. At length their numbers had greatly increased. They wanted more land. They wanted our country. Our eyes were opened, and our minds became uneasy. Wars took place. Indians were hired to fight against Indians, and many of our people were destroyed. They also brought strong liquors among us. It was strong and powerful, and has slain thousands.

"Brother!—Our seats were once large, and yours were very small. You have now become a great people, and we have scarcely a place left to spread our blankets. You have got our country, but are not satisfied. You want to force your religion upon us.

* Spirituous liquor.

"Brother!—Continue to listen. You say that you are sent to instruct us how to worship the Great Spirit agreeably to his mind; and if we do not take hold of the religion which you white people teach, we shall be unhappy hereafter. You say that you are right and we are lost. How do we know this to be true? We understand that your religion is written in a book. If it was intended for us as well as for you, why has not the Great Spirit given it to us; and not only to us, but why did he not give to our forefathers the knowledge of that book, with the means of understanding it rightly? We only know what you tell us about it. How shall we know when to believe, being so often deceived by the white people.

"Brother!—You say there is but one way to worship and serve the Great Spirit. If there is but one religion, why do you white people differ so much about it? Why not all agree, as you can all read the book?

"Brother!—We do not understand these things. We are told that your religion was given to your forefathers, and has been handed down from father to son. We also have a religion which was given to our forefathers, and has been handed down to us their children. We worship that way. It teaches us to be thankful for all the favors we receive, to love each other, and to be united. We never quarrel about religion.

"Brother!—The Great Spirit has made us all. But he has made a great difference between his white and red children. He has given us a different complexion and different customs. To you he has given the arts; to these he has not opened our eyes. We know these things to be true. Since he has made so great a difference between us in other things, why may we not conclude that he has given us a different religion, according to our understanding? The Great Spirit does right. He knows what is best for his children. We are satisfied.

"Brother!—We do not wish to destroy your religion, or take it from you. We only want to enjoy our own.

"Brother!—You say you have not come to get our land or our money, but to enlighten our minds. I will now tell you that I have been at your meetings and saw you collecting money from the meeting. I cannot tell what this money was intended for, but suppose it was for your minister; and if we should conform to your way of thinking, perhaps you may want some from us.

"Brother!—We are told that you have been preaching to white people in this place. These people are our neighbors. We are acquainted with them. We will wait a little while, and see what effect your preaching has upon them. If we find it does them good and makes them honest and less disposed to cheat Indians, we will then consider again what you have said.

"Brother!—You have now heard our answer to your talk, and this is all we have to say at present. As we are going to part, we will come and take you by the hand, and hope the Great Spirit will protect you on your journey, and return you safe to your friends,"

The speech being finished, Red-Jacket and several others, intending to suit the action to the word, came forward to exchange a farewell greeting with their visitor. This however he declined, and the Indians quietly withdrew.

The civility of the old orator was in somewhat angular contrast with his obstinacy on many other occasions. A young clergyman once made a strong effort to enlighten him, through the medium of an Indian interpreter named Jack Berry*—for Red-Jacket spoke very little of the English language. The result was discouraging. "Brother!"—said Jack, at length, for the Chief,—"If you white people murdered 'the Saviour,' make it up yourselves. We had nothing to do with it. If he had come among us we should have treated him better." This was gross heathenism, truly, but it was not aggravated by insolence. The Chieftain made a sincere acknowledgement of the clergyman's kindness, and paid him some deserved compliments upon other scores.

* Jack called himself a chief, too, though his importance was owing mainly to his speaking bad English, and to a bustling shrewdness which enabled him to play

During the last war with England, a gallant officer of the American Army,* stationed on the Niagara frontier, shewed some peculiarly gratifying attentions to Red-Jacket. The former being soon afterwards ordered to Governor's Island, the Chief came to bid him farewell. "Brother,"—said he, "I hear you are going to a place called Governor's Island. I hope you will be a Governor yourself. I am told you whites consider children a blessing. I hope you will have one thousand at least. Above all, wherever you go, I hope you will never find whiskey more than two shillings a quart."

The last of these benevolent aspirations was perhaps the highest possible evidence which Red-Jacket could give of his good will, for we are under the mortifying necessity of placing this talented Chieftain in the same class, as relates to his personal habits, with Uncas, Logan, and Pipe. In a word, he gradually became, in his latter days, a confirmed drunkard. Tempration and association proved too strong for him, and the pride of the Confederates made himself but too frequently a laughing-stock for the blackguards of Buffalo.

the factorum to some advantage. Jack made himself first marshall at the funeral of Farmer's-Brother.

* Colonel Snelling. For several of the anecdotes in the text we are under obligations to the author of "Tales of the North-West." He was present at the interview when Berry acted as Interpreter.

Unfortunately for his political as well as person interests, he indulged his weakness to such an exte as not unfrequently to incapacitate him for the dicharge of his public duties. This was an advanta which his opponents shrewdly considered, and, 1827, they took a favorable opportunity to deprihim of his civil rank. The document issued fix the Seneca council-house on this singular occasion under date of September 15th, is too extraordinary be omitted. The following is a literal translation made by an intelligent American who was present

"We, the Chiefs* of the Seneca tribe, of the ! Nations, say to you, Yaugoyawathaw, that you he a long time disturbed our councils; that you ha procured some white men to assist you in sending great number of false stories to our father the Pre dent of the United States, and induced our people sign those falsehoods at Tonnawanta as Chiefs of c tribe, when you knew that they were not Chiefs; th you have opposed the improvement of our nation and made divisions and disturbances among our pe ple; that you have abused and insulted our great ther the President; that you have not regarded t rules which make the Great Spirit love us, and whi make his red children do good to each other; tl you have a bad heart, because, in a time of great d tress, when our people were starving, you took a hid the body of a deer you had killed, when yo starving brothers should have shared their proporti of it with you; that the last time our father the Pre dent was fighting against the king, across the gr waters, you divided us, you acted against our fatl the President and his officers, and advised with the who were no friends; that you have always preve ed and discouraged our children from going to scho

* Several of them were soi-disant functionaries.

† A variation of Saguoaha, which is the orthogram adopted by Governor Clinton

where they could learn, and abused and fied about our people who were willing to learn, and about those who were offering to instruct them how to worship the Great Spirit in the manner Christians do; that you have always placed yourself before those who would be instructed, and have done all you could to prevent their going to schools; that you have taken goods to your own use, which were received as annuities, and which belonged to orphan children and to old people; that for the last ten years you have often said the communications of our great father to his red children were forgeries, made up at New-York by those who wanted to buy our lands; that you left your wife, because she joined the Christians and worshipped the Great Spirit as they do, knowing that she was a good woman; that we have waited for nearly ten years for you to reform, and do better; but are now discouraged, as you declare you never will receive instruction from those who wish to do us good. as our great father advises, and induce others to hold the same language.

"We might say a great many other things, which make you an enemy to the Great Spirit, and also to your own brothers,—but we have said enough, and now renounce you as a chief, and from this time you are forbid to act as such. All of our nation will hereafter regard you as a private man; and we say to them all, that every one who shall do as you have done, if a chief, will, in like manner be disowned, and bet back where he started from by his brethren."

Several of these charges, it is fair to presume, were dictated by party spirit, and those who subscribed the deposition cared but little about proving them, could they but prostrate their great antagonist. The signatures are twenty-six, and most of them are well-known Anti-Pagans; though with Young-King, Polard, and Little-Billey, who led the subscription, we also find the names of Twenty-Canoes, Doxtaten, Two-Guns, Barefoot, and some other partizans of the fallen orator in his better days.

* Buffalo Emporium.

But Red-Jacket was not yet prepared to submit patiently to his degradation, especially when he knew so well the true motives of those who effected it. Nor was he by any means so much under the control of his bad habits as not to feel occasionally, perhaps generally, both the consciousness of his power and the sting of his shame. "It shall not be said of me,"-thought the old Orator, with the gleam of a fiery soul in his eye,-" It shall not be said that Saguoaha lived in insignificance and died in dishonor. Am I too feeble to revenge myself of my enemies? Am I not as I have been?" In fine, he roused himself to a great effort. Representations were made to the neighboring tribes,—for he knew too well the hopelessness of a movement confined to his own,-and only a month had elapsed since his deposition, when a Grand Council of the chiefs of the Six Nations assembled together at the upper council-house of the Seneca-village reservation.

The document of the Christian party was read, and then Half-Town rose, and, in behalf of the Catteraugus (Seneca) Indians, said there was but one voice in his nation, and that was of general indignation at the contumely cast on so great a man as Red-Jacket. Several other chiefs addressed the council to the same effect. The condemned orator rose slowly, as if grieved and humiliated, but yet with his ancient air of command.

"My Brothers!"—he said, after a solemn pause,—You have this day been correctly informed of an attempt to make me sit down and throw off the authority of a chief, by twenty-six misguided chiefs of my nation. You have heard the statements of my associates in council, and their explanations of the foolish charges brought against me. I have taken the legal and proper way to meet these charges, It is the only way in which I could notice them

Charges which I despise, and which nothing would induce me to notice but the concern which many respected Chiefs of my nation feel in the character of their aged comrade. Were it otherwise, I should not be before you. I would fold my arms, and sit quietly under these ridiculous slanders.

"The Christian party have not even proceeded legally, according to our usages, to put me down. Ah! it grieves my heart, when I look around me and see the situation of my people,—in old times united and powerful, now divided and feeble. I feel sorry for my nation. When I am gone to the other world,—when the Great Spirit calls me away,—who among my people can take my place? Many years have I guided the nation."

Here he introduced some artful observations on the origin of the attack made upon him. He then alluded to the course taken by the Christians, as ruinous and disgraceful, especially in their abandonment of the religion of their fathers, and their sacrifices, for paltry considerations, of the lands given them by the Great Spirit. As for the 'Black-Coats,' Mr. Calhoun had told him at Washington, four years before, that the Indians must treat with them as they thought proper; the Government would not interfere. "I will not consent,"—he concluded, sagaciously identifying his disgrace with his opposition to the Christians. "I will not consent silently to be trampled under foot. As long as I can raise my voice, I will oppose such measures. As long as I can stand in my moccasins. I will do all that I can for my nation." It is scarcely necessary to add, that the result of the conference was the triumphant restoration of the Orator to his former rank.

Red-Jacket visited the Atlantic cities repeatedly and for the last time, as late as the spring of 1829 He was, on these occasions, and especially on the latter, the object of no little curiosity and attention.*

* Of more indeed than he was probably aware. Wit-

He enjoyed both, and was particularly careful to demean himself in a manner suited to the dignity of his rank and reputation. His poetical friend does him but justice in thus alluding to his Washington medal his forest costume, and the fine carriage which the Chieftain still gallantly sustained.

Thy garb—though Austria's bosom-star would frighten
That medal pale, as diamonds, the dark mine,
And George the Fourth wore, in the dance at Brighten
A more becoming evening dress than thine:

Yet 'tis a brave one, scorning wind and weather, And fitted for thy couch on field and flood, As Rob Roy's tartans for the highland heather, Or forest green for England's Robin Hood.

Is strength a monarch's merit?—like a whaler's—
Thou art as tall, as snaewy, and as strong
As earth's first kings—the Argo's gallant sailors—Heroes in history, and gods in song.

Those strictly personal attractions which most subserved his forensic success, are not unfairly delined ted by the same elegant observer. And this is not the only civilized authority to the same effect, for one of the most distinguished public men of the State is which the Chieftain resided, was wont to say that the latter reminded him strongly of the celebrated orat of Roanoke, in his best estate, and that they two well ness the following advertisement in the Boston p

&quot;Red-Jacket.—This celebrated Indian Chief, whas recently attracted so much attention at New-Yo and the Southern cities, has arrived in this city, and haccepted an invitation of the Superintendant to visit to New-England Museum, this evening, March 21, in I full Indian costume, attended by Captain Johnson, I interpreter, by whom those who wish it can be introdued and hold conversation with him."

the only orators of nature he had ever heard or seen. "Who will believe?"—asks the poet—

——that, with a smile whose blessing Would, like the patriarch's, sooth a dying hour; With voice as low, as gentle, and caressing, As e'er won maiden's lip in moonlight bower;

With look, like patient Job's, eschewing evil;
With motions, graceful as a bird's in air;
Thou art, in sober truth, the veriest devil
That e'er clenched fingers in a captive's hair!

That in thy veins there springs a poison fountain, Deadlier than that which bathes the Upas tree; And in thy wrath a nursing cat o'mountain Is calm as her babe's sleep, compared with thee?

And underneath that face, like summer's ocean's—
Its lip as moveless, and its cheek as clear,— Slumbers a whirlwind of the heart's emotions,
Love, hatred, pride, hope, sorrow—all, save fear.

Love—for thy land, as if she were thy daughter; Her pipes in peace, her tomahawk in wars; Hatred—of missionaries and cold water; Pride—in thy rifle-trophies and thy scars;

Hope—that thy wrongs will be by the Great Spirit Remembered and revenged, when thou art gone; Sorrow—that none are left thee to inherit Thy name, thy fame, thy passions, and thy throne.

In the last of these stanzas is an allusion to the melancholy domestic circumstances of the subject of them. He had been the father of thirteen children, during his life-time, and had buried them all.

Red-Jacket is said to have understood English quite well, although he would never converse in it. We have often heard it from a gentleman well acquainted with him, that he once met him hastening out of Buffalo when all the neighboring country was

II.—Cc

Ba

ad

VV

la

P ar

n

le

de

175

W

e

eagerly rushing in to witness the execution of three culprits; and that the Chieftain recognized him, and made him understand by signs, that he was hurrying away from the horrid spectacle which so many thousands had already assembled to enjoy. states, that, in his conference with Lafavette, he evidently comprehended every thing uttered in his presence, while he would speak only Indian; and that his former high opinion of the General seemed to be much increased by a few chance-medley Seneca words, which the latter had the good fortune to remember, and the courtesy to repeat. We also have been informed that, many years since, when the notorious Jemima Wilkinson compassed the country in the business of making proselytes to her doctrines, she invited some of the Senecas to a conference. Red-Jacket attended, and listened patiently to the end of a long address. Most of it he probably understood, but instead of replying to the argument in detail, he laid the axe at the root of her authority. Having risen very gravely, and spoken a few words in Seneca, he observed his adversary to enquire what he was talking about? "Ha!"-he exclaimed, with an arch look,-" She inspired,-she Jesus Christ,and not know Indian?" The solidity of her pretensions was at once decided in the minds of at least the heathen part of her audience.

At the date of his last-mentioned visit to the Atlantic cities, the Chieftain was more than seventy years of age, and though then habitually temperate, excess had already hastened the work of time. He died in January, 1830, at the Seneca village, near Buffalo, where his funeral took place on the 21st of the month. It was attended by all parties of his own tribe, and by many Americans, drawn together by a curiosity to witness the obsequies. His body was removed from his cabin into the mission-house, where religious services were performed. In these the Pagans took but little interest. Wrapped in profound and solemn thought, they however patiently awaited their termination. Some of them then arose, and successively addressed their countrymen in their own language. They recounted the exploits and the virtues of him whose remains they were now about to bear to his last home. They remembered his own prophetic appeal—"Who shall take my place among my people?" They thought of the ancient glory of their nation, and they looked around them on its miserable remant. The impression was irresistible. Tears trickled down the cheeks of the grave comrades of the dead.

Well might they weep! He that lay before them was indeed the 'Last of the Senecas.' The strong warrior's arm was mouldering into dust, and the eye of the orator was cold and motionless forever.

APPENDIX.

NO. I.

UNCAS.—The author is indebted to the Committee of the Historical Society of Massachusetts for an opportunity to examine a valuable document recently forwarded to them by Mr. Williams, of Lebanon, Connecticut, and originally, we believe, a part of the Trumbull collection.

According to this account, which purports to have been 'made by Uncas' himself, that Chieffain was wholly of the royal blood of the Pequots. TATGRAM was another name for Sassacus, and Uncas married the daughter of that Sachem (from whom he afterwards revolted,) about ten years before the Pequot War. The Pequots and 'Moheags,' as they are here called, jointly agreed to this match in a grand Indian Council, for the purpose of keeping their land entire. "Upon this his right to the Pequot Country was good and unquestionable." "Quinebange [New-Haven] Indians and Nipmugs [in Worcester County, Massachusetts] not allowed to marry in the Royal Blood.—Agreed to keep the Royal Blood within the Realm of ye Mohegan and Pequots."

In this genealogy, which is regularly derived, as accurately as possible, from remote ancestors on both sides, Uncas himself is styled the Sachem of Mohegan, and Mohegan is said to have been the Sepulchre or Burial-Place of both the Pequot and Mohegan Sachems.

The father of Tatobam was the Sachem Wopegwosit. The father of Uncas was Oweneco; his father, Wopequand, a Pequot Sachem. His mother and grandmother were both named Mukkunump; and the latter was daughter of Weroum, a great Narragansett Sachem, and of a Squaw of the royal Pequot Blood named Kiskhechoowatmakunck. One of his great-grandfathers, Nuckquuntdowaus, was Chief-Sachem of the Pequots e of his great-grandmothers, Au-comp-pa-hang-muck," (as nearly as we are able to decipher it,) a Great Queen, and lived at Moheage."

son of Uncas, (mentioned in the text,) was Owenleveral of his other descendants who inherit-Sachemdom were named Ben Uncas,—one of Iajor Ben. The last of the Sachems (also menin the text.) was Isaiah,—a grandson of Oweneco co. (He was a pupil in Dr. Wheelock's Charity ,—"a fat fellow, of dull intellectual parts."— document before us gives an account of the cesthe Pequot Country from Uncas by deed, dated 28, 1740. The following remarkable passage not to be omitted, as it adds new confirmation to imate of the Sachem's character which the anas given in the text.

His. Coll.)

erwards sufficient planting ground was provided a, being friendly to the English, though only to

is own purposes.'

NO. II

spondence between General WAYNE and Major CAMPBELL.

(1)

MIAMIS RIVER, Aug. 21, 1794.

rmy of the United States of America, said to be your command, having taken post on the banks of amis, for upwards of the last twenty-four hours, within the reach of the guns of this fort, being a longing to His Majesty the King of Great Britain, ed by His Majesty's troops, and which I have the o command, it becomes me to inform myself, as y as possible, in what light I am to view your; such near approaches to this garrison.

Cc2

I have no hesitation on my part to say that I know of no war existing between Great Britain and America

I have the homor to be, &c.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL,
Major 94th Reg't. commanding a British post on the banks of the Miamis.
Major General Wayne

To Major General Wayne, &c. &c.

(11)

Camp on the Banes of the Miams, 2 21st August, 1794.

BIR.

I have received your letter of this date, requiring from me the motives which have moved the army under my command to the position they at present occupy, far within the acknowledged jurisdiction of the United States of America.

Without questioning the authority, or the propriety, sir, of your interrogatory, I think I may, without breach of decorum, observe to you, that were you intitled to an answer, the most full and satisfactory one was announced to you from the muzzles of my small arms yesterday morning in the action against hordes of savages in the vicinity of your post, which terminated gloriously to the American arms. But had it continued until the Indians, &c. were driven under the influence of the post and guiss you mention, they would not have much impeded the progress of the victorious army under my command; as no such post was established at the commencement of the present war between the Indians and the United States.

I have the honor to be, sir, &c.

(Signed) ANTHONY WAYNE, Major General and Commander in Chief of the Federal army.

To Major Wm. Campbell, &c.

(111)

FORT MIAMIS, Aug. 22, 1791.

Sir,
Although your letter of yesterday's date fully authorizes me to any act of hostility against the army of the United States of America in this neighborhood under your command, yet, still anxious to prevent that dreadful decision, which perhaps is not intended to be appealed to by either of our countries, I have forborne for these two days past to resent those insults which you have offered to the British flag flying at this fort, by approaching it within pistol-shot of my works, not only singly, but in numbers, with arms in their hands.

Neither is it my wish to wage war with individuals. But should you after this continue to approach my post in the threatening manner you are at this moment doing, my indispensable duty to my King and Country, and the honor of my profession, will oblige me to have recourse to those measures which thousands of either nation may hereafter have cause to regret, and which I solemnly appeal to God I have used my utmost endeavors to arrest.

I have the honor to be, sir, &c.
(Signed) WM. CAMPBELL.

To Major General Wayne, &c.

[No other notice was taken of this letter than what is expressed in the following letter. The fort and works were however reconnoitered in every direction, at some points possibly within pistol-shot. It was found to be a regular, strong work, the front covered by a wide river, with four guns mounted in that face. The rear, which was the most susceptible of approach, had two regular bastions furnished with eight pieces of artillery, the whole surrounded with a wide deep ditch. From the bottom of the ditch to the top of the parapet was about twenty feet perpendicular. The works were also surrounded by an abbatis, and furnished with a strong garrison.]

(14)

SIR,

In your letter of the 21st inst. you declare, "I have no hesitation on my part to say that I know of no war existing between Great Britain and America."

I, on my part, declare the same; and the only cause I have to entertain a contrary idea at present is, the hostile act you are now in commission of,—that is, recently taking post far within the well-known and acknowledged limits of the United States, and erecting a fortification in the heart of the settlements of the Indian tribes now at war

This, sir, appears to be an act of the highest aggression, and destructive to the peace and interest of the Union. with the United States. Hence, it becomes my duty to desire, and I do hereby desire and demand, in the name of the President of the United States, that you immediately desist from any further act of hostility or aggression, by forbearing to fortify, and by withdrawing the troops, artillery, and stores under your orders and direction, forthwith, and removing to the nearest post occupied by His Britannic Majesty's troops at the peace of 1783—and which you will be permitted to do unmolested by the troops under my command. ANTHONY WAYNE. I am, with very great respect, &c.

To Major William Campbell, &c.

FORT MIAMIS, 22d Aug. 1794.

I have this moment the honour to acknowledge the re ceipt of your letter of this date. In answer to which I have only to say, that being placed here in the command of British post, and acting in a military capacity only, I cannot enter into any discussion either on the right or improprie of my occupying my present position. Those are matter that I conceive will be best left to the ambassadors of

Having said this much, permit me to inform you, the certainly will not abandon this post at the summons of different nations. power whatever, until I receive orders from those I the honour to serve under, or the fortune of war st

I must still adhere, sir, to the purport of my lette morning, to desire that your army, or individuals belo to it, will not approach within reach of my cannon w oblige me. expecting the consequences attending it.

Although I have said in the former part of my that my situation here is totally military, yet let sir, that I am much deceived if His Majesty th of Great Britain had not a post on this river at and prior to the period you mention.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) WM. CAMPBELL.
Major of the 24th Regiment, commanding at Fort Miamis.

To Major General Wayne, &c.

[The only notice taken of this letter was in immediately setting fire to and destroying every thing within view of the fort, and even under the muzzles of the guns.]

Boston Chronicle, October 13, 1774.

NO. III.

CORN-PLANTER'S Letter to the Governor of Pennsylvania, dated "Alleghany river, 2d mo. 2d, 1822," and probably written by his interpreter. From Buchanan's Sketches.

"I feel it my duty to send a speech to the governor of Pennsylvania at this time, and inform him the place where I was from—which was Conewaugus, on the Genesee river.

"When I was a child, I played with the butterfly, the grasshopper and the frogs. As I grew up, I began to pay some attention and play with the Indian boys in the neighborhood, and they took notice of my skin being a different color from theirs, and spoke about it. I enquired of my mother the cause, and she told me that my father was a residenter in Albany. I eat still my victals out of a bark dish-I grew up to be a young man, and married me a wife, but I had no kettle or gun. I then knew where my father lived, and went to see him, and found he was a white man, and spoke the English language. He gave me victuals while I was at his house, but when I started to return home, he gave me no provision to eat on the way. He gave me neither kettle nor gun, neither did he tell me that the United States were about to rebel against the government of England.

"I will now tell you, brothers, who are in session of the legislature of Pennsylvania, that the Great Spirit has made known to me that I have been wicked; and the cause thereof was the revolutionary war in America. The cause of Indians having been led into sin, at that time, was that many of them were in the practice of drinking and getting intoxicated. Great Britain requested us to join with them in the conflict against the Americans, and promised the Indians land and liquor. I, myself, was opposed to joining in the conflict, as I had nothing to do with the difficulty that existed between the two parties. I have now informed you how it happened that the Indians took a part in the Revolution, and will relate to you some circumstances that occurred after the close of the war. Gen. Putnam, who was then at Philadelphia, told me there was to be a council at fort Stanwix, and the Indians requested me to attend on behalf of the Six Nations, which I did, and there met with three commissioners, who had been appointed to hold the council. They told me they would inform me of the cause of the revolution, which I requested them to do minutely. They then said that it had originated on account of the heavy taxes that had been imposed upon them by the British government, which had been for fifty years increasing upon them; that the Americans had grown weary thereof, and refused to pay, which affronted the king. There had likewise a difficulty taken place about some tea, which they wished me not to use, as it had been one of the causes that many people had lost their lives. And the British government now being affronted, the war commenced, and the cannons began to roar in our country. General Putnam then told me at the council at fort Stanwix, that by the late war the Americans had gained two objects: they had established themselves an independent nation, and had obtained some land from Great Britain to live upon, the division line of which ran through the lakes. I then spoke, and said that I wanted some land for the Indians to live on, and General Putnam said that it should be granted, and I should have land in the state of New York, for the Indians. Gen. Putnam then encouraged me to use my endeavors to pacify the Indians generally, and as he considered it an arduous task to perform, wished to know what I wanted to pay therefor? I replied to him, that I would use my endeavors to do as he had requested with the Indians, and for pay thereof,

tie

ta

al

to

FD

ha

M

ne

me

OW

the

hav

Ner

b d lity eor

66

wir

te s oje

lose

ke t

ing

le.

he

lom

trafo

17.

I would take land. I told him not to pay me money or dry goods, but land. And for having attended thereto I received the tract of land on which I now live, which was presented to me by governor Mifflin. I told general Putnam, that I wished the Indians to have the exclusive privilege of the deer and wild game, which he assented to.

"The treaty that was made at the aforementioned council has been broken by some of the white people which I now intend acquainting the governor with Some white people are not willing that Indians should hunt any more, whilst others are satisfied therewith, and those white people who reside near our reservation, tell us that the woods are theirs, and they have obtained them from the governor. The treaty has been also broken by the white people using their endeavors to destroy all the wolves, which was not spoken about in the council at fort Stanwix, by General Putnam, but has originated lately.

"It has been broken again, which is of recent origin. White people wish to get credit from Indians, and do not pay them honestly, according to their agreement.

In another respect it has also been broken by white people, who reside near my dwelling; for when I plant melons and vines in my field, they take them as their own. It has been broken again by white people using their endeavors to obtain our pine trees from us. We have very few pine trees on our land, in the state of New York; and white people and Indians often get into dispute respecting them. There is also a great quantity of whiskey brought near our reservation by white people, and the Indians obtain it and become drunken.

"Another circumstance has taken place which is very trying to me, and I wish the interference of the Governor. The white people who live at Warren, called upon me sometime ago, to pay taxes for my land, which I objected to, as I had never been called upon for that purpose before; and having refused to pay, the white people became irritated, called upon me frequently, and at length brought four guns with them and seized our cattle. I still refused to pay, and was not willing to let the cattle go. After a long dispute, they returned home and I understood the militia was ordered out to enforce the collection of the tax. I went to Warren, and, to avert the impending difficulty, was obliged to give my note for the tax, the amount of which was forty-three dollars and seventy-nine cents. It is my desire that the governor will exempt me from paying taxes for my land to white people; and also cause that the money I am now obliged to pay, may be refunded to me, as I am very poor. The governor is the person who attends to the situation of the people, and I wish him to send a person to Alleghany, that I may inform him of the particulars of our situation, and he be authorised to instruct the white people in what manner to conduct themselves towards the Indians.

"The governor has told us that when any difficulties arose between the Indians and white people, he would attend to having them removed. We are now in a tring situation, and I wish the governor to send a person, authorised to attend thereto, the fore part of the next summer, about the time that grass has grown big enough for pasture.

"The governor formerly requested me to pay attention to the Indians, and take care of them. We are now arrived at a situation that I believe Indians cannot exist, unless the governor should comply with my request, and send a person authorised to treat between us and the white people, the approaching summer. I have now no more to speak."

NO. IV.

CORN-PLANTER'S SPEECH at the Court-House at War ren, (N. Y.) June 4th, 1822, after an explanation, by tw state Commissioners, of a law exonerating him from the payment of certain taxes. From the Venango Heral

"Brothers!—Yesterday was appointed for us al meet here. The talk which the Governor sent us pled us very much. I think that the Great Spirit is much pleased that the white people have been ind so to assist the Indians as they have done, and the pleased also to see the great men of this State at the United States so friendly to us. We are much ed with what has been done.

"The Great Spirit first made the world, and next the flying animals, and found all things good and prosperous. He is immortal and everlasting. After finishing the flying animals, he came down on earth and there stood. Then he made different kinds of trees, and weeds of all sorts, and people of every kind. He made the spring and other seasons, and the weather suitable for planting. These he did make. But stills, to make whiskey to be given to Indians, he did not make. The Great Spirit bids me tell the white people not to give Indians this kind of liquor. When the Great Spirit had made the earth and its animals, he went into the great lakes, where he breathed as easily as any where else, and then made all the different kinds of fish. The Great Spirit looked back on all that he had made. The different kinds he made to be separate, and not to mix with and disturb each other. But the white peoble have broken his command by mixing their color with the Indians. The Indians have done better by not doing so.—The Great Spirit wishes that all wars and fightings should cease.

"He next told us that there were three things for people to attend to. First, we ought to take care of our wives and children. Secondly, the white people ought to attend to their farms and cattle. Thirdly, the Great Spirit has given the bears and deers to the Indians. He is the cause of all things that exist, and it is very wicked to go against his will. The Great Spirit wishes me to inform the people that they should quit drinking intoxicating drink, as being the cause of diseases and death. He told us not to sell any more of our lands, for he never sold lands to any one. Some of us now keep the seventh day; but I wish to quit it, for the Great Spirit made it for others, but not for the Indians, who ought every day to attend to their business. He has ordered me to quit drinking any intoxicating drink, and not to lust after women but my own, and informed me that by doing so I should live the longer. He made known to me that it is very wicked to tell lies. Let no one suppose this I have said now is not true.

"I have now to thank the Governor for what he has done. I have informed him what the Great Spirit has ordered me to cease from, and I wish the Governor to inform others of what I have communicated This is all I have at present to say."

II.—D d

NO. V.

Mr. Brandt, whose death has been recently announced, was the son of the celebrated Indian chief of that name, and distinguished himself as a lieutenant in our service during the late war. Some years ago he visited England, and under the patronage of the Duke of Northumberland, was introduced to the Duke of Wellington, Lord Teignmouth, and other influential personages, and from his peculiar urbanity of manners and highly cultivated acquirements, speedily became known and esteemed. His exertions, upon that occasion, in vindicating the humanity of his father's character from the unjust aspersions cast upon it by the author of "Gertrude of Wyoming," were acknowledged by the accomplished poet, and the next edition of that work rectified the error Mr. Campbell had acknowledged. As a gentleman of strict honor and morality, Mr. Brandt has left but few equals; and as head-chief and superintendant of the Six Nations, his loss will be seriously felt by the numerous tribes to whose civilization and moral improvement he had devoted his time and talents.—Kingston, U. C. Chronicle.

NO. VI.

Letter of Farmer's-Brother, and others, to the Hom. W. Eustis, Secretary of War. Niles' Register, Vol. II.

"Brother!—The sachems and chief warriors of the Seneca nation of Indians, understanding you are the person appointed by the great council of your nation to manage and conduct the affairs of the several nations of Indians with whom you are at peace and on terms of friendship, come at this time, as children to a father, to key before you the trouble which we have on our minds.

Brother!—We do not think best to multiply words. We will therefore tell you what our complaint is.

"Brother!-Listen to what we say. Some years since we held a treaty at Big-tree, near the Genesee river. This treaty was called by our great father, the President of the United States. He sent an agent, Colonel Wadsworth, to attend this treaty, for the purpose of advising us in the business, and seeing that we had justice done us. At this treaty we sold to Robert Morris the greatest part of our country. The sum he gave us was one hundred thousand dollars.

"Brother!—The Commissioner who was appointed on your part, advised us to place this money in the hands of our great father, the President of the United States. He told us our father loved his red children, and would take care of our money, and plant it in a field where it would bear seed forever, as long as trees grow or waters run. Our money has heretofore been of great service to us. It has helped us to support our old people, and our women and children. But we are told the field where our money was planted is become barren.

" Brother !- We do not understand your way of doing business. This thing is heavy on our minds. We mean to hold our white brethren of the United States by the hand. But this weight lies heavy. We hope you will remove it.

"Brother !-- We have heard of the bad conduct of our brothers towards the setting sun. We are sorry for what they have done. But you must not blame us. We have had no hand in this bad business. They have had bad people among them. It is your enemies have done this.

"We have persuaded our agent to take this talk to your great council. He knows our situations, and will speak our minds.

1

医多种种

Farmer's-Brother, his mark X			Wheel-Barrow, his mark X
Little Billy	do	X	Jack Berry	do	X
Young King	do	X	Twenty Canoes	do	X
Pollard	do		Big Kettle	do	X
Chief Warrior	do		Half-Town	do	X
Two Guns	do	X	Keyandeande	do	X
John Sky	do		Captain Cold	do	X
Parrot-Nose	do		Esq. Blinkey	do	X
John Pierce	do	X	Captain Johnson	do	X
Strong	do	X

N. B. The foregoing speech was delivered in Council by Farmer's-Brother, at Buffalo Creek, December 19, 1811, and subscribed in my presence, by the Chiefs whose names are annexed.

(Signed) ERASTUS GRANGER."

NO. VII.

Extracted from the American Remembrancer (an impartial and authentic collection of facts, published in London during the Revolutionary War) for the year 1782, vol. 14, p. 185.

Boston, March 12.

Extract of a letter from Captain Gerrish, of the New-England Militia, dated Albany, March 7.

"The peltry taken in the expedition, will, you see, amount to a good deal of money. The possession of this booty at first gave us pleasure; but we were struck with horror to find among the packages, eight large ones containing scalps of our unfortunate country folks, taken in the three last years by the Seneca Indians from the inhabitants of the frontiers of New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, and sent by them as a present to Colonel Haldimand, Governor of Canada, in order to be by him transmitted to England. They were accompanied by the following curious letter to that gentleman.

" Tioga, January 3d, 1787.

B

" May it please your Excellency,

"At the request of the Seneca Chiefs, I herewith send to your Excellency, under the care of James Hoyd, eight packages of scalps, cured, dried, hooped, and painted with all the triumphal marks, of which the following is the invoice and explanation.

No. 1. Containing forty-three scalps of Congress soldiers, killed in different skirmishes. These are stretched on black hoops, four inch diameter—the inside of the skin painted red with a small black spot, to note their being killed with bullets. Also, sixty-two of farmers killed in their houses; the hoops painted red—the skin brown and marked with a hoe—a black circle all to denote their being surprised in the night—and: hatchet in the middle, signifying their being with that weapon.

2. Containing ninety-eight of farmers, killed in suses, hoops red—figure of a hoe, to mark their on—great white circle and sun, to shew they rrprised in the day-time—a little red foot, to shew od upon their defence, and died fighting for their id families.

containing ninety-seven of farmers. Hoops to shew they were killed in the fields—a large sircle with a little round mark on it for the sun, it was in the day time—black bullet-mark on hatchet on others.

l. Containing one hundred and two of farmers, of several of the marks above, only eighteen with a little yellow flame, to denote their being mers burnt alive, after being scalped—their nails but by the roots, and other torments. One of tter supposed to be of an American clergyman, d being fixed to the hoop of his scalp. Most of mers appear, by the hair, to have been young or aged men, there being but sixty-seven very grey mong them all, which makes the service more il.

i. Containing eighty-eight scalps of women, hair aided in the Indian fashion, to shew they were — hoops blue—skin yellow ground, with little coles, to represent, by way of triumph, the tears occasioned to their relations—a black scalping: hatchet at the bottom, to mark their being kill-hose instruments. Seventeen others, hair very llack hoops—plain brown color—no marks but the lub or casse-tete, to show they were knocked ead, or had their brains beat out.

i. Containing one hundred and ninety-three salps, of various ages. Small green hoops—whitand on the skin, with red tears in the middle and sarks—knife, hatchet or club, as their death hap-

'. Containing two hundred and eleven girl's big and little—small yellow hoops, white ground hatchet, club, scalping-knife, &c.

No. 8. This package is a mixture of all the varieties above mentioned, to the number of one hundred and twenty-two, with a box of birch back containing twenty nine little infants' scalps, of various sizes—small whith hoops, white ground—no tears, and only a little black knife in the middle, to shew they were ripped out of their mothers' bellies.

With these packs the chiefs send to your excellency the following speech, delivered by Conicogatchie in council, interpreted by the elder Moore, the trader, and taken down by me in writing.

"Father!—We send you herewith many scalps, that you may see we are not idle friends.

A blue belt.

"Father!—We wish you to send these scalps over the water to the great king, that he may regard them and be refreshed, and that he may see our faithfulness in destroying his enemies, and be convinced that his presents have not been made to an ungrateful people.

A blue and white belt with red tassels.

"Father!—Attend to what I am now going to say. It is a matter of much weight. The great King's enemies are many, and they grow fast in number. They were formerly like young panthers. They could neither bite nor scratch. We could play with them safely. We feared nothing they could do to us. But now their bod ies have become as big as the elk, and strong as the buf falo. They have also great and sharp claws. They have driven us out of our country for taking part in your quarrel. We expect the great King will give us anoth er country, that our children may live after us, and be his friends and children as we are. Say this for us to our great King. To enforce it, give this belt.

A great white belt with blue tassels.

"Father!—We have only to say further, that your traders exact more than ever for their goods; and our hun ting is lessened by the war, so that we have fewer skins to give for them. This ruins us. Think of some remedy. We are poor, and you have plenty of every thing. We know you will send us powder and guns, and knives and hatchets. But we also want shirts and blankets."

A little white belt.

DN

8

01

Di

ye

ye

81

th

p.

C

Т

th

8

I do not doubt but that your Excellency will think it proper to give some further encouragement to these honest people. The high prices they complain of are the necessary effect of the war. Whatever presents may be sent for them through my hands shall be distributed with prudence and fidelity.

I have the honour of being your Excellency's most obedient and most humble servant.

JAMES CRAWFORD."

[The Author of this work owes an apology to the public for having inadvartently omitted, in his first edition, to explain the foregoing document as being, not actually what it purports to be, but, according to a new general understanding, a fabrication, for obvious political purposes, from the pen of Dr. Franklin. Still, it has a certain illustrative value in connexion with the text, which, with this comment, may be deemed sufficient to justify its retention.]

NO. VIII.

"THE PAWNEE BRAVE.—One of the most prominent modern characters in Thatcher's Lives of the Indians is the celebrated Miami, Little Turtle, called in his own language Moshecunnaqua. Mr. T. gives him, on the authority of Schoolcraft, the credit of doing much to abolish the practice of human sacrifice among the savages of the West. The passage reminds us of a well-authenticated anecdote of a young Pawnee 'Brave,' who visited Washington some ten years since.

"The Pawnees were at war with another trans-Mississippian tribe living several days' journey to the south of them. In one of their forays into the enemy's country a party of warriors captured a beautiful Indian girl, and carried her home in triumph. A council of the Pawnees was called, and the prisoner was decreed to die at the fagot. The fatal pile was raised in the middle of a wide plain near the villages of the tribes, and an immense multitude of all ages and sizes—for the Pawnees are still quite numerous—collected to witness the ceremony. Just as the flame was about being set around the trembling victim, a gallant war chief rushed forward to the pile, leading two fleet horses thoroughly caparisoned for a journey. He unloosed the bands which confined the prisoner at one stroke of his knife, helped her to mount one of his steeds, mounted the other himself, and, before his countrymen had recovered from their first surprise, had cleared the ring, and was a mile or two on his way to the south. He continued his attendance two days, and then left her within the territory of her own tribe, and with provisions for the residue of the way. On his return home not a word of reproach was uttered against him-He was popular; and the Pawnees not only thought proper to overlook the liberty he had taken in consideration of his bravery, but they ascribed the act to the inspiration of the Great Master of Life. It is said there has been no instance of sacrifice among them from that day to this.

"We have forgotten, if we ever knew, this gallant fellow's name; but he was much complimented at Washing ton, and especially by the ladies of that city, as the 'Paw nee Brave.' "-N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

The authenticity of this anecdote seems to be past dispute. Dr. Morse, in his Indian Report (who refers to the MS. Journal of Capt. Bell), and also Johnston, in his Narrative, have furnished some additional and very interesting particulars respecting this heroic Pawnee, for which we commend the reader to the Appendix of the former book (p. 247), and to pp. 219, 220, &c., of the latter. The tribe referred to above was the Paduces. The name of the Pawnee, who is believed to be still living, at the age of about 35, is Petalesharoe. He is son of the well-known "Knife-Chief" of his tribe, who has once or twice visited Washington, and whose portrait, elegantly executed by Mr. Neagle, is to be seen in one of the volumes of Godman's Natural History.

THE END.

M2

268

.

.

APR 8- 1964

